PREFACE.

THE original intention of the Editor of this work was to make it a guide to the better comprehension by English readers of the immortal works of Robert Burns and Walter Scott, and of the beautiful Scottish poetry to be found in the ancient and modern ballads and songs of the "North Countrie,"—and not only to the English but to all other admirers of Scottish literature, where it differs from that of England, and to present to them in accessible and convenient form such words as are more poetical and humorous in the Scottish language than in the English, or are altogether wanting in the latter. The design gradually extended itself as the compiler proceeded with his task, until it came to include large numbers of words derived from the Gaelic or Keltic, with which Dr. Jamieson, the author of the best and most copious Scottish Dictionary hitherto published, was very imperfectly or scarcely at all acquainted.

"Broad Scotch," says Dr. Adolphus Wagner, the erudite and sympathetic editor of the Poems of Robert Burns, published in Leipzig, in 1835, "is literally broadened,—i.e., a language or dialect very worn off, and blotted, whose original stamp often is unknowable, because the idea is not always to be guessed at." This strange mistake is not confined to the Germans, but prevails to a large extent among Englishmen, who are of opinion that Scotch is a provincial dialect of the English,—like that of Lancashire or Yorkshire,—and not entitled to be called a language. The truth is, that English and Lowland Scotch were originally the same, but that the literary and social influences of London as the real metropolis of both countries, especially after the transfer of the royal family of Stuart from Edinburgh to London, at the commencement of the seventeenth century, favoured the infusion of a Latin element into current English, which the Scotch were slow to adopt.

In the year 1870, the author contributed two papers to Blackwood's Magazine on "The Poetry and Humour of the Scottish Language." Those papers are here reprinted with such copious additions as have extended the work to more than treble its original dimensions. The whole has undergone careful revision and emendation, and will, it is hoped, be found to contain not only characteristic specimens of the peculiar humour, but of the abounding poetical genius of the ancient and modern authors who have adorned the literature of Scotland from the days of Barbour, Douglas, and Montgomery to those of Allan Ramsay, Robert Burns, and Walter Scott, and down to our own times.

November 1887.

INTRODUCTION.

THE SCOTTISH LANGUAGE AND ITS LITERARY HISTORY.

THE Lowland Scottish language is not a mere dialect, as many English people believe; but a true language, differing sometimes from modern English in pronunciation, and more frequently in the possession of many beautiful words, which have ceased to be English, and in the use of inflexions unknown to literary and spoken English since the days of the author of Piers Ploughman and Chaucer. In fact, Scotch is for the most part old English. The English and Scotch languages are both mainly derived from various branches of the Teutonic; and five hundred years ago, may be correctly described as having been Anglo-Teutonic and Scoto-Teutonic. Time has replaced the Anglo-Teutonic by the modern English, but has spared the Scoto-Teutonic, which still remains a living speech. Though the children of one mother, the two have lived apart, received different educations, developed themselves under dissimilar circumstances, and received accretions from independent and unrelated sources. The English, as far as it remains an Anglo-Teutonic tongue, is derived from the Dutch or Flemish, with a large intermixture of Latin and French. The Scotch is indebted more immediately to the Dutch and Flemish spoken in Holland and Belgium, both for its fundamental and most characteristic words, and for its inflexion and grammar.

The English bristles with consonants. The Scotch is as spangled with vowels as a meadow with daisies in the month of May. English, though perhaps the most muscular and copious language in the world, is harsh and sibilant; while the Scotch, with its beautiful terminational diminutives, is almost as soft as the Italian. English songs, like those of Moore and Campbell,¹ however excellent they may be as poetical compositions, are, for these reasons, not so available for musical purposes as the songs of Scotland. An Englishman, if he sings of a "pretty little girl," uses words deficient in euphony, and suggests comedy rather than sentiment; but when a Scotsman sings of a "bonnie wee lassie," he employs words that are much softer than their English equivalents, express a tenderer and more romantic idea, and are infinitely better adapted to the art of the composer and the larynx of the singer. And the phrase is but a sample of many thousands of words that make the Scottish language more musical than its English sister.

The word Teutonic is in these pages used advisedly instead of "Saxon" or Anglo-Saxon. The word "Saxon" is never applied in Germany to the German or High Dutch, or to any of the languages that sprang out of it, known as Low Dutch. Even in the little kingdom of Saxony itself, the language spoken by the people is always called Deutsch (or German), and never Saxon. The compound word Anglo-Saxon is purely an invention of English writers at a comparatively late period, and is neither justified by Philology nor History.

¹ Neither of these was an Englishman. And it is curious to note that no Englishman since the time of Charles II. has ever rendered himself very famous as a song-writer, with the sole exceptions of Charles Dibdin and Barry Cornwall, whose songs are by no means of the highest merit; while Scotsmen and Irishmen who have written excellent songs, both in their own language and in English, are to be counted by the score—or the hundred.

Philology, even in the advanced period in which we now live, is, at the best, but a blind and groping science. It has made but little real progress since the invention of printing, having been anticipated mainly by shallow sciolists, who based etymology upon fanciful guesses and vague resemblances. A by no means unfair specimen of the class accounted for the vulgar word "sparrow-grass," a corruption of asparagus; by "sparrow" and "grass," on the assumption that the herb was a species of grass to which sparrows were particularly partial.

Many of the etymologies which English literature owes to Dr. Samuel Johnson, his predecessors and successors, in the lexicographic industry, are frequently as ludicrously ill-founded.

The name of the Southern portion of Great Britain has been derived from a supposed German tribe, who with the Jutes and Saxons invaded the island after the departure of the Romans. It happens, however, that there is no real foundation for the confident statement that the name of "Angles" was ever borne by or known to any German tribes. The invaders of the east coast of Britain, both North and South, came from the opposite coast of the continent, principally from Denmark, Holland, and Belgium, and brought their laws and language along with them. The true origin of the word "Angles" is the Keltic or Gaelic an, the definite article, and gaidheil (in which the dh are not pronounced), which signifies the "Gael" or the Celts; whence An-gael, and not Angle. The erroneous interpretation, still too firmly fixed in the minds of both the learned and the unlearned to be easily eradicated, was strengthened by a punning compliment paid by Pope Gregory the Great to a party of British youth of both sexes who were carried into slavery in Rome, and which is recorded in Hume's "History of England." "Struck with the beauty of their fair complexion and blooming countenances," says the historian, "Gregory asked to what country they belonged, and being told they were Angles, he replied that they ought more properly to be denominated Angels, as it would be a pity that the Prince of Darkness should enjoy so fair a prey, and that so beautiful a frontispiece should cover a mind so destitute of internal graces and righteousness."

The epithet "Anglo-Saxon," now so frequently applied to the natives of South Britain, is of recent origin, and was not known in the golden age of English literature, when Shakspeare and Spenser flourished, nor until the second half of the eighteenth century. Great Britain was known to the Romans as Anglia centuries before the Saxons, or that section of them erroneously supposed to have been called Angles, established themselves in any part of the country. It was not until the Hanoverian family of the Georges had given three sovereigns to the country that courtly writers began to talk of the Anglo-Saxon origin of the people, and that the epithet finally became synonymous with "English." It is true that in the time of the Romans a small portion of the eastern coast of Anglia, immediately opposite Belgium and Holland, was called "the Saxon shore." The name was given to it from the fact that successive swarms of Flemish, Dutch, and Danish pirates had succeeded in forming settlements on the littoral, though they had never been able to penetrate into the interior of the country. The Gael, or Celts, called these pirates Sassenach, as the Southern English are called to this day by the Gaelic and Keltic-speaking people of Wales, Ireland, and Scotland. The word did not originally signify a German or native of Saxony, but a robber.

The Scottish people, though they do not hate the English as too many of the Irish unfortunately do, remark with pride that Scotland is a nation of itself, that it can boast of an antiquity as venerable and of a history as illustrious as that of its larger realm—the throne of which one of its native kings ascended by hereditary right in the seventeenth century, and in succession to Queen Elizabeth—and they object to being called Englishmen. By the Act of Union between the two nations, the names of England and Scotland were legislatively abolished, Scotland being called North Britain, and England South Britain, while the army, navy, and government were severally denominated those of Great Britain, and not the army, navy, and government of either England or Scotland.

But popular usage in South Britain and at the seat of government has proved itself stronger than the Act of Parliament, and many of the Scotch themselves, yielding to the literary and colloquial fashion set by the South, find themselves speaking, sometimes in praise, sometimes in blame, of the English Government. It cannot, however, be affirmed that the objection taken by the northern nation to the southern usurpation of the epithet English is in any way unreasonable, founded as it is upon the commonly received if not universal opinion that the English receive their name from the German "Angles." The Southern English believe this fable, and not aware of the fact that they are not half so much German as they think themselves, make light of the Scottish objection, and call it sentimental, and unworthy of practical consideration. But if Angles are in reality "Angael" or the Gael, the Scottish and Northern British people are quite as much Angael or English as those of the south, and the English Government is rightfully the designation of government of the whole kingdom. This fact should remove the natural jealousy of the Scotch, and cut away from the conceit of the South British the very slender and rotten foundation on which it is based. But until the Southern English admit the fact that a colony of Germans did not give name to England, but that the whole country of Britain, otherwise Anglia, as the Romans called it, derives its name from the Keltic Angael, the North British are quite right in objecting and in refusing to recognise in their Southern fellow-countrymen the sole and exclusive title to the honourable designation.

The principal components of the Scottish tongue, as distinguished from modern and literary English, are derived not from German or High Dutch, but from the Low Dutch, comprising many words once possessed by the English, but which have become obsolete in the latter ; secondly, words and inflexions derived from the Dutch or Flemish, and Danish ; thirdly, words derived from the French, or from the Latin through a French medium ; and fourthly, words derived from the Gaelic or Keltic language of the Highlands, and of Ireland. As regards the first source, it is interesting to note that in the Glossary appended to Mr. Thomas Wright's edition of those ancient and excellent alliterative poems, the " Vision " and " Creed " of Piers Ploughman, there occur about two thousand obsolete English or Anglo-Teutonic words, many of which are still retained in the Scottish Lowlands ; and that in the Glossary to Tyrwhitt's edition of Chaucer there occur upwards of six thousand words which need explanation to modern English readers, but fully one half of which need no explanation whatever to a Scotsman. Even Shakspeare is becoming obsolete, and uses upwards of two thousand four hundred words which Mr. Howard Staunton, in many respects his most judicious editor, thinks it necessary to collect in a glossary for the better elucidation of the text. Many of these words are perfectly familiar to a Scottish ear, and require no interpreter. It appears from these facts that the Scotch is a far more conservative language than modern English, and that although it does not object to receive new words, it clings reverently and affectionately to the old. The consequence of this mingled tenacity and elasticity is, that it possesses a vocabulary which includes for a Scotsman's use every word of the English language, and several thousand words which the English have suffered to drop into desuetude.

In addition to this conservancy of the very bone and sinew of the language, the Scoto-Teutonic has an advantage over the modern English, in having reserved to itself the power, while retaining all the old words of the language, to eliminate from every word all harsh or unnecessary consonants. Thus it has loe, for love; fa', for fall; wa', for wall; awfu', for awful; sma', for small; and many hundreds of similar abbreviations which detract nothing from the force of the idea or the clearness of the meaning, while they soften the roughness of the expression. No such power resides in the English or the French, though it once resided in both, and very little of it in the German language, though it remains in all those European tongues which trace their origin to the Low Dutch. The Scottish poet or versifier may write fa' or "fall" as it pleases him, but his English compeer must write "fall" without abbreviation. Another source of the superior euphony of the Scoto-Teutonic is the single diminutive in ie, and the double diminutive in kie, formed from och or ock, or possibly from the Teutonic chen, as in mädchen, a little maid, which may be applied to any noun in the language, as wife, wifie, wifoch, wifikie, wife, little wife, very little wife; bairn, bairnie, bairnikie, child, little child, very little child; bird, birdie, birdikie; and lass, lassie, lassock, lassikie, &c.¹ A very few English nouns remain susceptible of one of these two diminutives, though in a less musical form, as lamb, lambkin; goose, gosling, &c. The superior beauty of the Scottish forms of the diminutive is obvious. Take the following lines from Hector MacNeil's song, "My Boy Tammie:"—

"I held her to my beating heart,
My young, my smiling lammie."

Were the English word lambkin substituted for lammie in this passage the affectionate and tender would be superseded by the prosaic.

While these abbreviations and diminutives increase not only the melody but the naïveté and archness of the spoken language, the retention of the old and strong inflexions of verbs, that are wrongfully called irregular, contributes very much to its force and harmony, giving it at the same time a superiority over the modern English, which has consented to allow many useful preterites and past-participles to perish altogether. In literary and conversational English there is no distinctive preterite for the verbs to beat, to bet, to bid, to forbid, to cast, to hit, to hurt, to put, and to set; while only three of them, to beat, to bid, and to forbid, retain the past-participles beaten, bidden, and forbidden. The Scottish language, on the contrary, has retained all the ancient forms of these verbs; and can say, "I cast, I coost, and I have casten a stone," or "I put, I pat, or I have putten on my coat," "I hurt, I hurted, or I have hurten myself," and "I let, I loot, or I have letten, or looten, fa' my tears," &c.

Chaucer made an effort to introduce many French words into the courtly and literary English of his time, but with very slight success. No such systematic effort was made by any Scottish writer, yet, nevertheless, in consequence of the friendly intercourse long subsisting between France and Scotland—an intercourse that was alike political, commercial, and social—a considerable number of words of French origin crept into the Scottish vernacular, and there established themselves with a tenacity that is not likely to be relaxed as long as the language continues to be spoken. Some of these are among the most racy and characteristic of the differences between the English and the Scotch. It will be sufficient if we cite the following:—To fash one's self, to be troubled with or about anything—from se fâcher, to be angered; douce, gentle, good-tempered, courteous—from doux, soft; dour, grim, obdurate, slow to forgive or relent—from dur, hard; bien, comfortable, well to do in worldly affairs—from bien, well; ashet, a dish—from assiette, a plate; a creel, a fish-basket—from creille, a basket; a gigot of mutton—from gigot, a leg; aumrie, a linen press, or plate-cupboard—from armoire, a movable cupboard or press; bonnie, beautiful and good—from bon, good; airles and airle-penny, money paid in advance to seal a bargain—from arrhes, a deposit on account; brulzie, a fight or dispute—from s'embrouiller, to quarrel; callant, a lad—from galant, a lover; braue, fine—from brave, honest and courageous; dool, sorrow—from deuil; grozet, a gooseberry (which, be it said in parenthesis, is a popular corruption from gorse-berry)—from groseille; taupie, a thoughtless, foolish girl, who does not look before her to see what she is doing—from taupe, a mole; and haggis, the Scottish national dish (“Fair fa’ its honest, sonsie face!”)—from hachis, a hash; pawen, peacock—from paon; caddie, a young man acting as a porter or messenger—from cadet, the younger born, &c.

The Teutonic words derived immediately from the Dutch and Flemish, and following the rules of pronunciation of those languages, are exceedingly numerous. Among these are wanhope—from wanhoop, despair; wanchancie, wanlust, wanrestful, and many others, where the English adopt the German un instead of wan. Ben, the inner, as distinguished from but, the outer, room of a cottage, is from binne, within, as but is from beuten, without. Stane, a stone, comes from steen; smack, to taste—from smack; goud, gold—from goud; loupén, to leap—from loopen; fell, cruel, violent, fierce—from fel; kist, a chest—from kist; mutch, a woman's cap—from mutts; ghaist, a ghost—from geest; kame, a comb—from kam; rock-lay (rocklaigh), a short coat—from rok, a petticoat or jupon; het, hot—from heet; geck, to mock or make a fool of—from gek, a fool; lear, knowledge—from leer, doctrine or learning; bane or bain, a bone—from been; paddock, a toad—from pad; caff, chaff—from kaf, straw; yooky, itchy—from yuk, an itch; clyte, to fall heavily or suddenly to the ground—from kluyt, the sward, and kluyter, to fall on the sward; blythe, lively, good-humoured, from blyde, contented.

The Scottish words derived from the Gaelic are apparent in the names of places and in the colloquial phraseology of everyday life. Among these, ben, glen, burn, loch, strath, corrie, and cairn will recur to the memory of any one who has lived or travelled in Scotland, or is conversant with Scottish literature. Gillie, a boy or servant; grieve, a land-steward or agent, are not only ancient Scottish words, but have lately become English. Loof, the open palm, is derived from the Gaelic lamh (pronounced laff or law), the hand; cuddle, to embrace—from cadail, sleep; whisky—from uisge, water; clachan, a village—from clach, a stone, and clachan, the stones; croon, to hum a tune—from cruin, to lament or moan; bailie, a city or borough magistrate—from baile, a town; may serve as specimens of the many words which, in the natural intercourse between the Highlanders and the Lowlanders, have been derived from the ancient Gaelic by the more modern Scoto-Teutonic.

Four centuries ago, the English or Anglo-Teutonic, when Chaucer, Gower, and Lydgate were still intelligible, had a much greater resemblance to the Scoto-Teutonic than it has at the present day. William Dunbar, one of the earliest, as he was one of the best of the Scottish poets, and supposed to have been born in 1465, in the reign of James III. in Scotland, and of Edward IV. in England, wrote, among other poems, the "Thrissel and the Rose." This composition was alike good Scotch and good English, and equally intelligible to the people of both countries. It was designed to commemorate the marriage of James IV. with Margaret Tudor, daughter of King Henry VII. of England—that small cause of many great events, of which the issues have extended to our time, and which gave the Stuarts their title to the British throne. Dunbar wrote in the Scotch of the literati rather than in that of the common people, as did King James I. at an earlier period, when, a captive in Windsor Castle, he indited his beautiful poem, "The King's Quair," to celebrate the grace and loveliness of the Lady Beaufort, whom he afterwards married. The "Thrissel and the Rose" is only archaic in its orthography, and contains no words that a commonly well-educated Scottish ploughman cannot at this day understand, though it might puzzle some of the clever University men who write for the London press to interpret it without the aid of a glossary. Were the spelling of the following passages modernised, it would be found that there is nothing in any subsequent poetry, from Dunbar's day to our own, with which it need fear a comparison :—

" Quhen Merché wes with variand windis, past,
And Apryll haddé, with her silver shouris
Tane leif at nature, with ane orient blast,
And lusty May, that mudder is of flouris,
Had maid the birdis to begyn their houris
Among the tender odouris reid and quhyt,
Quhois harmony to heir it was delyt.
In bed at morrowe, sleiping as I lay,
Methocht Aurora, with her crystal een,
In at the window lukit by the day,
And halsit me with visage paille and grene,
On quhois hand a lark sang fro the splene:
'Awauk luvaris! out of your slummering!
See how the lusty morrow dois upspring!'"

King James V. did not, like Dunbar, confine his poetic efforts to the speech of the learned, but is supposed to have written in the vernacular of the peasantry and townspeople his well-known poem of "Peblis to the Play." This composition scarcely contains a word that Burns, three hundred years later, would have hesitated to employ. In like manner King James V., in his more recent poem of "Christ's Kirk on the Green," written nearly three hundred and twenty years ago,¹ made use of the language of the peasantry to describe the assembly of the lasses and their wooers that came to the "dancing and the deray," with their gloves of the "raffele richt" (right doeskin), their "shoon of the straitis" (coarse cloth), and their

"Kirtles of the lincum [Lincoln] licht, Weel pressed wi' mony plaitis."

His description of "Gillie" is equal to anything in Allan Ramsay or Burns, and quite as intelligible to the Scottish peasantry of the present day:—

"Of all thir maidens mild as meid
Was nane say gymp as Gillie;
As ony rose her rude was reid,
Hir lire was like the lily.
Bot zallow, zallow was hir heid,
And sche of luif sae sillie,
Though a' hir kin suld hae bein deid,
Sche wuld hae bot sweit Willie."

Captain Alexander Montgomery, who was attached to the service of the Regent Murray in 1577, and who enjoyed a pension from King James VI., wrote many poems in which the beauty, the strength, and the archness of the Scottish language were very abundantly displayed. "The Cherry and the Slae" is particularly rich in words, that Ramsay, Scott, and Burns have since rendered classical, and is besides a poem as excellent in thought and fancy as it is copious and musical

¹ "This is doubtful," says the late Lord Neaves, in a letter to the editor of this volume. "These obscure questions are fully discussed by Dr. Irving in his History of Scottish Poetry. I should say the probability was that 'Pebelis to the Play' and 'Christ's Kirk' are by the same authors or of the same age, and neither of them by James V."

in diction. Take the description of the music of the birds on a May morning as a specimen :—

“ The cushat croods, the corbie cries,
The coukoo couks, the prattling pies
To keck hir they begin.
The jargon o’ the jangling jays,
The craiking craws and keckling kayes,
They deaved me with their din.
The painted pawn with Argus e’en
Can on his mayock call;
The turtle wails on withered trees,
And Echo answers all.
Repeting, with greting,
How fair Narcissus fell,
By lying and spying
His schadow in the well.”

The contemporaneous, perhaps the more recent, poetry of what may be called the ballad period, when the beautiful legendary and romantic lyrics of Scotland were sung in hall and bower, and spread from mouth to mouth among the peasantry, in the days when printing was rather for the hundred than for the million, as well as the comparatively modern effusions of Ramsay and Burns, and the later productions of the multitudinous poets and prose writers who have adorned the literature of Scotland within the present century, afford very convincing proofs, not only of the poetic riches, but of the abundant wit and humour of the Scottish people, to which the Scottish language lends itself far more effectually than the English. Long anterior to the age when the noble art of printing was invented for the delight and instruction of mankind, the poetry of the bards of the “North Countrie” was familiar not only to the people of the North Countrie itself, but to those of the Teutonic south—a far less poetic race than their Keltic brethren; and northern ballads were recited or sung in hall and bower among the upper classes, and in the popular gatherings of the multitude at fairs and festivals. These ballads, which often received an English colouring in travelling southwards, were highly esteemed for at least three centuries before the days of Shakspeare. The great poet was himself familiar with them, as is shown by more than one quotation from them in his immortal works.

Since the time when James VI. attracted so many of his poor countrymen to England, to push their fortunes at the expense of Englishmen, who would have been glad of their places, to the day when Lord Bute's administration under George III. made all Scotsmen unpopular for his sake, and when Dr. Samuel Johnson, who was of Scottish extraction himself [the son of a Scot, established as a bookseller in Leicester], and pretended to dislike Scotsmen—the better perhaps to disguise the fact of his lineage, and turn away suspicion—up to the time of Charles Lamb and the late Rev. Sydney Smith, it has been more or less the fashion in England to indulge in jokes at the expense of the Scottish people, and to portray them not only as overhard, shrewd, and “canny” in money matters, but as utterly insensible to “wit.” Sydney Smith, who was a wit himself, and very probably imbibed his jocosity from the conversation of Edinburgh society, in the days when in that city he cultivated literature, as he himself records, upon a little oatmeal, is guilty of the well-known assertion that “it takes a surgical operation to drive a joke into a Scotsman's head.” It would be useless to enter into any discussion on the differences between “wit” and “humour,” which are many, or even to attempt to define the divergency between “wit” and what the Scotch call “wut;” but, in contradiction to the reverend joker, it is necessary to assert that the “wut” of the Scotch is quite equal to the “wit” of the English, and that Scottish humour is superior to any humour that was ever evolved out of the inner consciousness or intellect of the English peasantry inhabiting the counties south of Yorkshire. There is one thing, however, which perhaps Sydney Smith intended when he wrote, without thinking very deeply, if at all, about what he said; the Scotch as a rule do not like, and do not understand banter, or what in the current slang of the day is called "chaff." In "chaff" and "banter" there is but little wit, and that little is of the poorest, and contains no humour whatever. "Chaff" is simply vulgar impertinence; and the Scotch being a plain and serious people, though poetical, are slow to understand and unable to appreciate it. But with wit, or "wut," and humour, that are deserving of the name, they are abundantly familiar; and their very seriousness enables them to enjoy them the more. The wittiest of men are often the most serious, if not the saddest and most melancholy (witness Thomas Hood, Douglas Jerrold, and Artemus Ward), and if the shortest possible refutation of Sydney Smith's assertion were required, it might be found in the works of Burns, Scott, and Christopher North. Were there no wit and humour to be found in Scotland except in the writings of these three illustrious Scotsmen, there would be enough and to spare to make an end of this stale "chaff;" and to show by comparison that, wit and humorist as Sydney Smith may have been, he was not equal as a wit to Robert Burns, Sir Walter Scott, or Professor Wilson. In what English poem of equal length is there to be found so much genuine wit and humour mingled with such sublimity and such true pathos and knowledge of life and character as in "Tam o' Shanter"? What English novel, by the very best of English writers, exceeds for wit and humour any one of the great Scottish romances and tales of Sir Walter Scott, the least of which would be sufficient to build up and sustain a high literary reputation? And what collection of English jests is equal to the "Laird of Logan," or Dean Ramsay's "Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character"? Joe Miller's "Jest Book," and all the countless stories that have been fathered upon Joe Miller—one of the most melancholy of men—are but dreary reading, depending as they mostly do for their point upon mere puns and plays upon words, and to a great extent being utterly deficient in humour. It seems to require some infusion of Keltic blood in a nation to make the people either witty or appreciative of wit; for the dullest of all European peoples are without exception those in whom the Keltic least prevails. There is little or no wit or sense of wit in the peasantry of the South of England, though there may be some degree of coarse humour. Whereas the Scottish and the Irish peasantry are brimful both of wit and humour. If any one would wish to have a compendium of wisdom, wit, humour, and abundant knowledge, kindly as well as unkindly, of human nature, let him look to Allan Ramsay's "Collection of Scots Proverbs," where he will find a more perfect treasury of "pawkie," "cannie," "cantie," shrewd, homely, and familiar philosophy than English literature affords. And the humour and wit are not only in the ideas, but in the phraseology, which is untranslatable. Scottish poetry and pathos find their equivalents in English and Teutonic, but the quaint Scottish words refuse to go into any other idiom. "A man's a man for a' that"—strong, characteristic, and nervous in the Scottish Doric, fades away into attenuation and banalité when the attempt is made to render the noble phrase into French or German, Italian or Spanish. Even in English the words lose their flavour, and become weak by the substitution of "all that," for the more emphatic "a' that." Translate into literary English the couplet in "Duncan Gray," in which the rejected lover of Maggie

Grat his e'en baith bleer't and blin—
Spak o' lowpin ower a lin—

and the superior power of expressing the humorous which belongs to the Scottish language will at once become apparent. In the same way, when Luath, the poor man's dog, explains to his aristocratic friend what a hard time the poor have of it, a literal translation of the passage into colloquial English would utterly deprive it of its tenderness and humour:—

A cotter howkin in a sheugh,
 Wi' dirty stanes biggin a dyke,
 Baring a quarry and sic like;
 Himsel' an' wife he thus sustains
A smyttrie o' wee duddie weans,
 And nocht but his hand darg to keep Them right and tight in thack and rape.

The “smytrie o' wee duddie weans” is simply inimitable, and sets a fair English translation and even a paraphrase at defiance.

Time was within living memory when the Scotch of the upper classes prided themselves on their native “Doric ;” when judges on the bench delivered their judgments in the broadest Scotch, and would have thought themselves guilty of puerile and unworthy affectation if they had preferred English words or English accents to the language of their boyhood ; when advocates pleaded in the same forcible tongue ; when ministers of religion found their best way to the hearts and to the understanding of their congregations in the use of the language most familiar to themselves, as well as to those whom they addressed ; and when ladies of the highest rank—celebrated alike for their wit and their beauty—sang their tenderest, archest, and most affecting songs, and made their bravest thrusts and parries in the sparkling encounters of conversation, in the familiar speech of their own country. All this, however, is fast disappearing, and not only the wealthy and titled, who live much in London, begin to grow ashamed of speaking the language of their ancestors, though the sound of the well-beloved accents from the mouths of others is not unwelcome or unmusical to their ears, but even the middle-class Scotch are learning to follow their example. The members of the legal and medical profession are afraid of the accusation of vulgarity that might be launched against them if they spoke publicly in the picturesque language of their fathers and grandfathers; and the clergy are unlearning in the pulpit the brave old speech that was good enough for John Knox [who was the greatest Angliciser of his day, and was accused by Winyet of that fault], and many thousands of pious preachers who, since his time, have worthily kept alive the faith of the Scottish people by appeals to their consciences in the language of their hearts. In ceasing to employ the "unadorned eloquence" of the sturdy vernacular, and using instead of it the language of books and of the Southern English, it is to be feared that too many of these literary preachers have lost their former hold upon the mind of the people, and that they have sensibly weakened the powers of persuasion and conviction which they possessed when their words were in sympathetic unison with the current of thought and feeling that flowed through the broad Scottish intellect of the peasantry. And where fashion leads, snobbism will certainly follow, so that it happens even in Scotland that young Scotsmen of the Dundreary class will sometimes boast of their inability to understand the poetry of Burns and the romances of Scott on account of the difficulties presented by the language!—as if their crass ignorance were a thing to be proud of!

But the old language, though of later years it has become unfashionable in its native land, survives not alone on the tongue but in the heart of the "common" people (and where is there such a common [or uncommon] people as the peasantry of Scotland?), and has established for itself a place in the affections of those ardent Scotsmen who travel to the New World and to the remotest part of the Old, with the auri sacra fames, to lead them on to fortune, but who never permit that particular species of hunger—which is by no means peculiar to Scotsmen—to deaden their hearts to their native land, or to render them indifferent to their native speech, the merest word of which, when uttered unexpectedly under a foreign sky, stirs up all the latent patriotism in their minds, and opens their hearts, and if need be their purses, to the utterer. It has also by a kind of poetical justice established for itself a hold and a footing even in the modern English which affects to ignore it; and, thanks more especially to Burns and Scott, and, in a minor degree, to Professor Wilson, and to the admiration which their genius has excited in England, America, and Australia, has engrafted many of its loveliest shoots upon the modern tree of actually spoken English. Every year the number of words that are taken like seeds or grafts from the Scottish conservatory, and transplanted into the fruitful English garden, is on the increase, as will be seen from the following anthology of specimens, which might have been made ten times as abundant if it had been possible to squeeze into one goblet a whole tun of hippocrene. Many of these words are recognised English, permissible both in literature and conversation; many others are in progress and process of adoption and assimilation; and many more that are not English, and may never become so, are fully worthy of a place in the Dictionary of a language that has room for every word, let it come whence it will, that expresses a new meaning or a more delicate shade of an old meaning, than any existing forms of expression admit. Eerie, and gloaming, and cannie, and cantie, and cozie, and lift, and lilt, and caller, and gruesome, and thud, and weird, are all of an ancient and noble pedigree, and were the most of them as English in the fifteenth century as they are fast becoming in the nineteenth.

If any Scotsman at home or abroad should, in going over the list in this epitome, fail to discover some favourite word that was dear to him in childhood, and that stirs up the recollections of his native land, and of the days when he "paidled in the burn," or stood by the trysting-tree "to meet his bonnie lassie when the kye cam' hame,"—one word that recalls old times, old friends, and bygone joys and sorrows,—let him reflect that in culling a posie from the garden, the posie must of necessity be smaller than the garden itself, and that the most copious of selectors must omit much that he would have been glad to add to his garland if the space at his disposal had permitted. He must also remember that all the growths of the garden are not rare flowers, but that weeds, though worthy of respect in their way, are not always of appropriate introduction into wreaths and garlands; and that the design of this Dictionary was not to include all Scotticisms, but only those venerable by their antiquity, quaint in their humour, touching in their simplicity, or admirable in their poetic meaning.

The principal writers who have adorned the literature of Scotland during the last three centuries, in addition to the nameless and unknown minstrels to whom we owe so many of the rugged but beautiful ballads of the North Countrie, may be fairly said to have commenced with Dunbar, Barbour, Henryson, and Montgomery, and to have ended with Professor John Wilson, author of the inimitable "Noctes Ambrosianæ" in Blackwood's Magazine. The list is long, and includes in the seventeenth and early years of the eighteenth centuries the names of William Crawford, author of many songs in the purest vernacular of the peasantry; of Hector MacNeil, whose exquisite ballad of the "Braes of Yarrow" would be alone sufficient to place him high in the muster roll of Scottish poets; and of Allan Ramsay, author of the "Gentle Shepherd," a pastoral poem of which the simple beauty was universally acknowledged at a time when pastoral poems were more to the taste of the age than they have been for the last century, and who collected into four volumes, under the title of the "Tea-Table Miscellany," all the favourite songs of the artificial period in which he flourished. Robert Burns had the highest reverence for the songs of Allan Ramsay, and considered it almost as bad as sacrilege to lay a reforming hand upon the compositions of his venerated predecessor, though Ramsay the wig-maker and barber was a star of very inferior magnitude and brilliancy compared with the solar effulgence that radiated from the genius of Burns the ploughman.

Between the period of Ramsay and that of Burns, which included about sixty years of very indifferent poetical manifestations, at least in Scotland, the lyric genius of the country continued as irrepressible, and songs of secondary merit flowed from the lips or pens of literate and illiterate people in a profuse stream. Even the unhappy events of 1715 and 1745, when the adherents of the dethroned and exiled Stuarts made their gallant and heroic attempts to re-establish themselves in the land of their birth and of their love—the land which they believed the Stuarts had a divine right to govern—the voice of song continued to be heard. True and tender-hearted people make love even in times of national peril and calamity, and the Scottish people sang or made love songs as usual in the homely and earnest dialect of the nation; while more earnest spirits gave vent to their political animosities and aspirations in the satirical rhymes and trenchant ballads that are still, under the name of “The Jacobite Minstrelsy of Scotland,” known to all the literary students of history, as affording a greater insight into the social spirit of the people than the more staid and solid records of the mere annalist or philosophical historiographer are able to convey. Of the popular Scottish songs of the still more prolific age that commenced with the publication of the poems of Robert Burns, I have spoken in “The Book of Scottish Song,” in words that I cannot do better than repeat in this place.

“Scotland is rich in the literature of song. The genius of the people is eminently lyrical. Although rigid in religion, and often gloomy in fanaticism, they have a finer and more copious music, are fonder of old romance and tradition, dance and song, and have altogether a more poetical aptitude and appreciation than their English brethren. For one poet sprung from the ranks of the English peasantry, Scotland can boast of ten, if not of a hundred. Ploughmen, shepherds, gardeners, weavers, tinklers, tailors, and even strolling beggars, have enriched the anthology of Scotland with thousands of songs and ballads of no mean merit. The whole land is as musical with the voice of song as it is with torrents and waterfalls. Every mountain glen, every strath and loch, every river and stream, every grove and grassy knowe, every castle, and almost every cottage, has its own particular song, ballad, or legend; for which the country is not so much indebted to scholars and men of learned leisure and intellectual refinement, as to the shrewd but hearty and passionate common people."

Of the Jacobite ballads, from which many quotations appear in the following pages, I said at the same time:—

"In the Jacobite songs more especially, the humour was far more conspicuous than the pathos. In the heat of the conflict, and when the struggle was as yet unended, and its results uncertain, ridicule and depreciation of the enemy were weapons more effective to stir the passions of the combatants than appeals to mere sentiment, even if the sentiment were as elevated as patriotism, or as tender as love and friendship. It was only when the Jacobite cause had become utterly hopeless, and when its illustrious adherents had laid down their lives for it on the bloody moor of Culloden, or on the cruel block of Tower Hill, or were pining in foreign lands in penury and exile, that the popular bards were so far inspired as to be able to strike the keynote of true poetry.

"As the age was, so were they. In their verse, as in a mirror, were reflected the events and feelings of the time. When the time was hopeful, they were hopeful. When the time was ribald, insolent, jaunty, and reckless, they responded to its touch like the harp-string to the harper. From 1688 to 1746 was the day of the common rhymers of the street or the ale-house, or the lone farmhouse among the hills—the day when the men of strong feelings, rude humour, and coarse wit could “say their say” in language intelligible alike to the clansman and the chief, the ploughman and the gentleman. And they were disputants who could hit as hard in the battles of the tongue as they could, if need were, in the battle of swords; and who could wield the musket and claymore in physical as effectually as the sledge-hammer of invective in moral warfare. Satire with them was not “a polished razor keen,” but a cudgel or a battering-ram; not a thing that merely drew blood, but that broke the skull and smashed the bones. But after the fatal fight of Culloden the voice of the coarse humorist, if not altogether silenced, was softened or subdued. There had been a time to sing and to dance, but it had passed, and the day of lamentation had succeeded it. The rhymers had flourished in the one epoch,—it was now the turn of the poets.

“Sorrow for the vanquished and indignation against the victors superseded all the lighter emotions which had hitherto found their expression in songs, ballads, and epigrams; and the echoes of national music that came from Scotland came from saddened hearts, and from desolate and all but depopulated glens. The voice of the mourner of these days was as pathetic and often as vehement as the inspired strains of Isaiah and Jeremiah, and partook of the phraseology as well as sentiment of the sacred writings. In the hour of their prosperity the Stewarts had been but common men; but when adversity befell them, they were elevated to the rank of heroes and demi-gods. Popular sympathy crowned them with graces and virtues which, as throned kings, they had never known; and loyalty, wavering in the sunshine of fortune, became firm as the rocks in the tempests of calamity."

Among the accomplished ladies who between the '45 and the advent of Burns adorned the poetical literature, the names of Lady Anne Lindsay, Mrs. Grant of Carron, Lady Grizzel Baillie, Mrs. Cockburn, Mrs. Crawford, and Miss Blamire stand conspicuous for the tender, joyous, arch, and melancholy ballads which they wrote to the beautiful old melodies of their country, and which still retain their place amid all the changes of the musical taste and fashion in our time.

Of the contemporaries of Robert Burns, whose reputations seem pale in the light of his genius, but who are still worthy of honourable mention for their contributions to the literature of their country, may be cited the names of the Rev. John Skinner, author of the renowned ballad of "Tullochgorum," "The Ewie wi' the Crooked Horn," and other songs still popular; William Julius Mickle, the author of "There's nae Luck about the Hoose," one of the most simply beautiful songs that were ever inspired by the domestic affections; Robert Ferguson, to whom Burns in a burst of poetic enthusiasm generously erected a mortuary memorial in a graveyard at Edinburgh; Lapraik, Semple, and Logan, and in a succeeding generation Dr. John Leyden; James Hogg, better known as the Ettrick Shepherd; the Baroness Nairn, authoress of "The Land o' the Leal" and "Caller Herrin';" and Robert Tannahill, the luckless Paisley weaver, who wrote "Jessie the Flower o' Dunblane;" William Ross, the author of "Eleonore;" and John Beattie, the luckless author of the admirable poem of "John o' Arnha'," that contains passages of wit, humour, and descriptive power only exceeded by the inimitable "Tam o' Shanter" of Burns; William Motherwell, Donald Carrick, Alexander Rogers, James Ballantine, and a very numerous multitude of bards—all more or less esteemed in Scotland—of which it would serve no good purpose to recapitulate the names, even if it were possible to do so. Favourable specimens of their writings may be seen by all who care to look for them in such collections as "Whistle-Binkie," "Scottish Minstrelsy" (six volumes), and the very numerous collections issued from the Edinburgh press from the beginning till the middle of the present century.

But the greatest of all literary preservers of the Scottish language was undoubtedly the illustrious author of the "Waverley Novels." He was aided in the congenial task of perpetuating that language by such lesser lights of literature as Allan Cunningham, John Galt, and Christopher North; but Sir Walter Scott towered far above them all, and carried the name and fame of Scotland, as well as the quaint graces and tender archaisms of the language, to the remotest parts of the civilised world.

The generations that have arisen since the old Abbey of Dryburgh received the mortal remains of that greatest of the Scottish writers, second to none of British birth, except Shakespeare, have lost sight in some degree of the works of the great Sir Walter. But though partially eclipsed in popularity, they are firmly established among the classics of the nineteenth century, not only in his own country, but in France and Germany. In their original garb—untranslatable to foreign nations in all their native vigour and delicate shades of meaning—they will consecrate to many a future generation that shall have ceased to speak Scottish, the remembrance of a noble old language. Yet it may be said with truth "that even in its ashes will live the wonted fires;" for modern English in the latter half of the nineteenth century has not disdained to borrow from the ancient Scotch many of the strong simple words that the fashionable English writers of the eighteenth century suffered to fall into desuetude. As there has been pre-Raphaelitism in painting, there have been and will continue to be pre-Addisonianism and even pre-Shakspearianism in the richly composite language spoken and written in these islands, and in the vast American and Australian continents that are rapidly producing a literature of their own. The English language of the future will in all probability comprise many words not now used or understood on the south of the Tweed, but that are quite familiar to the north of it, as well as in the United States and Australia. Such useful and poetical words as thud, gloamin', erie, dree, weird, and the others already cited, and which have been adopted from the ancient Scotch by the best English writers, are a clear gain to the language, and are not likely to be abandoned.

Whatever oblivion may attend the works of the great bulk of Scottish writers, Robert Burns and Walter Scott will certainly live in the affection of posterity; and if some of their words have already become obsolete, their wit and humour, their earnestness and their eloquence, and the whole spirit of their teachings, will survive. To aid English readers in the comprehension of these immortal books, and to remind Scottish readers of what they owe to the literary lights of their country, is one of the main objects of the present compilation. The author, if he can be called the author, or merely the artificer of this book, hopes that it will not only answer this particular purpose, but serve more generally to impress upon the minds of the people of this age how rich is the language of their ancestors, and what stores of literary wealth lie comparatively unknown and unregarded in the vernacular of what are irreverently called the "common people." It is the "common people" who create and shape the language, and the "uncommon people," known as authors, whose duty it is to help to perpetuate it in books for the pleasure and instruction of posterity.

DICTIONARY OF LOWLAND SCOTCH.

A

Ae, the indefinite article a, or one, and far more emphatic in poetical composition than ane or one, as in Burns's beautiful song "Ae fond kiss and then we sever." Some of the many half-English editors of the Scottish poet have altered ae into "one," which to a Scottish ear is the reverse of an improvement. Ae does not merely signify "one," but only one, and is definite and particular, not indefinite and general, in its meaning.

Aboon, above.

Aiblins, perhaps, possibly; from able, conjoined with lin or lins, inclining to, as in the "westlin wind"—wind inclining to the west; hence aiblins means inclining to be possible.

There's mony waur been o' the race,
And aiblins ane been better.

—BURNS: The Dream.
To George III.

Aidle, ditchwater; derivation unknown, but possibly from the Gaelic adhall, dull, heavy, stagnant.

Then lug out your ladle,
Deal brimstone like adde,
And roar every note of the damned.

—BURNS: Orthodox, Orthodox.

Ail at. What ails ye at? is a peculiarly Scottish synonym for What is your objection to her, him, or it?

An old servant who took a charge of everything that went on in the family, having observed that his master had taken wine with every lady at the table except one who wore a green dress, jogged his memory with the question, "What ails ye at her in the green gown?"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Air, early, from the Gaelic ear, the east, where the sun rises. "An air winter makes a sair winter;" which may be Englished, "An early winter makes a surly winter."

Airt, a point of the compass; also to direct or show the way. This excellent word ought to be adopted into English. It comes from the Gaelic ard, aird, a height. "Of a' the airts from which the wind can blaw," is better than "of all the quar- ters from which the wind can blow."

O' a' the airts the wind can blaw,
I dearly lo'e the west,
For there the bonnie lassie lives,
The lassie I lo'e best.—BURNS.

But yon green graff (grave), now huskie green,
Wad airt me to my treasure.—BURNS.

Aizle, a live coal that lies out of the fire. It is a superstition in England to call the live coals violently ejected from the fire by the gas generated in them by the names of "purses" or "coffins," according to the fanciful resemblance which they bear to these articles, and which are supposed to be prophetic of money, or of a death in the family. Some such superstition seems to lie at the root of the Scottish word aizle.

* She noticed that an aizle brunt
Her brow new worset apron.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Jamieson says the word was used metaphorically by the poet Douglas to describe the appearance of a country that has been desolated by fire and sword. In the Gaelic, aisleine signifies a death-shroud. The derivation, which has been suggested from hazel or hazel-nut, from the shape of the coal when ejected, seems untenable. The Gaelic aiscal, meaning joy, merriment, has also been suggested, as having been given by children to the flying embers shot out from the fire; but the derivation from aisleine seems preferable.

Anent, concerning, relating to.

This word has only recently been admitted into the English dictionaries published in England. In Worcester's and Webster's Dictionaries, published in the United States, it is inserted as a Scotticism. Mr. Stormonth, in his Etymological Dictionary (1871), derives it from the Anglo-Saxon on gean and the Swedish on gent, opposite; but the etymology seems doubtful.

The anxiety anent them was too intense to admit of the poor people remaining quietly at home.—The Dream Numbers, by T. A. TROLLOPE.

Arl-penny, a deposit paid to seal a bargain; earnest-money; French arrhes. From the Gaelic earlas or iartlas, earnest-money, a pledge to complete a bargain.

Here, tak' this gowd, and never want
Enough to gar ye drink and rant,
And this is but an arl-penny
To what I afterwards design ye.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Asse, the fireplace; the hearth; the place where the ashes or cinders fall. Asse-hole or ash-pit is supposed by some philologists to be derivable from the Gaelic aisir, a receptacle; ais, the back part of anything, or backwards.

Do ye no see Rob, Jock, and Hab,
As they are girded gallantlie,
While I am hurklin i' the asse?
I'll hae a new cloak about me.

—Ancient Ballad: *Tak' your Auld
Cloak about ye*.

Athol brose, whisky with honey, taken as a morning drop; a powerful and indigestive mixture, that no one but a Highlander out in the open air and in active exercise during the whole day can safely indulge in. Why it is named from the district of Athol in preference to any other part of the Highlands is neither known nor perhaps discoverable.

An' aye since he wore tartan trews
He dearly lo'ed the Athole brose,
And wae was he, you may suppose,
To play farewell to whisky.

—NEIL GOW.

Auld lang syne. This phrase, so peculiarly tender and beautiful, and so wholly Scotch, has no exact synonym in any language, and is untranslatable except by a weak periphrasis. The most recent English dictionaries have adopted it, and the expression is now almost as common in England as in Scotland. Allan Ramsay included in "The Tea-Table Miscellany" a song entitled "Old Long Syne," a very poor production. It remained for Robert Burns to make "Auld lang syne" immortal, and fix it for ever in the language of Great Britain, America, and the Antipodes. Lang sin syne is a kindred, and almost as beautiful a phrase, which has not yet been adopted into English.

A wee, a short time; contraction of a "wee while," or a little while. Bide-a-wee, wait a little.

Upon a summer afternoon,
A wee before the sun gaed down.

—The Lass o' Gowrie.

Awmrie, a chest, a cabinet, a secretaire; from the French armoire.

Close the awmrie, steek the kist,
Or else some gear will soon be missed.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Donald Caird.

Ayont, beyond or on the other side. A Northumbrian as well as a Scottish word. In the English Border "ayont the Tweed" is Scotland, and on the Scottish side of the Border it is England.

Bab. Any personal adornment worn by young lovers, either a bunch of flowers on the bosom, or a tassel or bow of ribbons. Lug-bab, an ear-ring; woor-babs, a knot of ribbons tied at the knee by the young peasant lads when they went courting. The word also signifies a cockade or other badge in the hat or bonnet.

Bauble is possibly of similar or the same origin. The word is derived from the Gaelic babag or baban, a tassel, a fringe, a knot, a cluster; and babach, innocent pleasure, applied to the bab as a symbol.

A cockit hat with a bab o' blue ribbons at it.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Old Mortality.

Bairn-time, a whole family of children, or all the children that a woman bears. This peculiarly Scottish word is a corruption of a bairn-teem; from the Gaelic taom, the English teem, to bear, to produce, to pour out.

Your Majesty, most excellent!

While nobles strive to please ye,

Will ye accept a compliment

A simple Bardie gi'es ye?

Thae bonny bairn-time Heaven has lent,
Still higher may they heeze ye!

—BURNS: A Dream, Addressed to George III.

The following lines, from "The Auld Farmer's New Year's Salutation to his Auld Mare, Maggie," show that Burns understood the word in its correct sense, though he adopted the erroneous spelling of time instead of teem:—

My plough is now thy bairn-time a',
Four gallant brutes as e'er did draw,

Forbye sax mae I sellt awa',

That thou has nurst;

They drew me thretteen pounds an' twa,
The very warst.

Balow! An old lullaby in the Highlands, sung by nurses to young children, as in the pathetic ballad entitled "Lady Anne Bothwell's Lament":—

Balow! my babe, lie still and sleep,
It grieves me sair to see thee weep!

Burns has "Hee, baloo!" to the tune of "The Highland Balow":—

Hee, baloo, my sweet wee Donald,
Picture of the great Clanronald.

The phrase is derived from the Gaelic bà, the equivalent of bye in the common English phrase "Bye! bye!" an adjuration to sleep—"Go to bye-bye;" and laogh, darling, whence, by the abbreviation of laogh into lao, bà-lao or balow—"Sleep, darling." Jamieson has adopted a ludicrous derivation from the French—"bas là le loup," which he mis-translates "Be still; the wolf is coming."

Bandster, one who makes a band or binds sheaves after the reapers in the harvest-field.

In hairst at the shearing, nae youths now are jeering,

The bandsters are lyart and wrinkled and grey;

At fair or at preaching, nae wooing or fleeching,

The flowers o' the forest are a' weed away.

—ELLIOT: The Flowers of the Forest.

In this pathetic lament for "the flowers" of Ettrick Forest—the young men slain at the doleful battle of Flodden—the maidens mourn in artless language for the loss of their lovers, and grieve, as in this touching stanza, that their fellow-labourers in the harvest-field are old men, wrinkled and grey, with their sparse locks, instead of the lusty youths who have died fighting for their country. The air of this melancholy but very beautiful song is pure Gaelic.

Bane-dry, dry as a bone; bane-idle, thoroughly idle; not only idle in the flesh, but in the bone and marrow.

Bang, to beat, to subdue; bangie or bangsome, quarrelsome, irritable, apt to take offence; bang-beggar, a constable or a constable's staff, and bangree, a scolding, irritable, and contentious woman. The etymology of these words is uncertain. The last seems to be derivable from the Gaelic ban, a woman; banag, a busy little woman; ban cheaird, a female tramp or gipsy.

Bannock, an oatmeal cake, originally compounded with milk instead of water.

Hale breeks, saxpence, and a bannock.
—BURNS: To James Tait, Glenconner.

Bannocks o' bear-meal, bannocks o' barley.
—Jacobite Song.

From the Gaelic bainne, milk.

Bap, a small wheaten cake or roll, sold in Scotland for breakfast when porridge is not used. The grandfather of a late Prime Minister of Great Britain kept a small shop in Leith Walk, Edinburgh, where he sold "baps," flour, oatmeal, peas, &c., and where he was popularly known to the boys of the neighbourhood as "Sma' Baps," because his baps were reputed to be smaller than those of his brother tradesmen.

Barken, to clot, to harden on the surface, as some viscous and semi-liquid mixtures do on exposure to the air. The word is derived from the bark or outward covering of trees.

Barm, yeast; old English; not yet obsolete in the rural districts.

Barmkin, a corruption of barbican, a watch-tower on a castle or fortress. The derivation of barbican (the name of a street in old London, still retained) is from the Gaelic bar, a pinnacle or high place; and beachan, a place of watching or observation. From beachan is derived beacon, a watch-fire, a signal light.

And broad and bloody rose the sun,
And on the barmkin shone.

And he called a page who was witty and sage
To go to the barmkin high.

—Border Minstrelsy; Lord Soulis.

Bauch, insipid, tasteless, without flavour, as in the alliterative proverb:—

Beauty but bounty's but bauch.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

(Beauty without goodness is without flavour.)

The etymology of this peculiarly Scottish word is uncertain, unless it be allied to the English baulk, to hinder, to impede, to frustrate; or from the Gaelic bac, which has the same meaning.

Baudrons, a pet name for a cat, for which no etymology has yet been found. The word remains as unaccountable as "Tybert," used by Shakspeare for the same animal.

Auld baudrons by the ingle sits,
Wi' her loof her face a washin'.

—BURNS: Sic a Wife as Willie had.

Bauk, the cross-beam in the roof of a cottage; baukie-bird, a name given to the bat, that haunts the roof. Bauk is from the English bauk, of which the primary meaning was from the Gaelic bae, to hinder, to frustrate, and was applied to the cross-beam of the roof because it prevented the roof from giving way, and to other wooden partitions necessary for division. It also came to signify to disappoint, because disappointment was the prevention or hindering of the fulfilment and realisation of hope.

When lyart leaves bestrew the yird,
Or, waverin' like the baukie-bird,
Bedim cauld Boreas' blast,
An' hailstones drive wi' bitter skyte.
—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

Bawbie, a halfpenny—metaphorically used for a fortune by Sir Alexander Boswell, the son of the more famous James Boswell, the biographer of Dr. Johnson. It occurs in the song of "Jennie's Bawbie:"— Quoth he, "My goddess, nymph, and queen,

Your beauty dazzles baith my e'en,"
But deil a beauty had he seen
But Jennie's bawbee.

Sir Alexander took the hint of his song from a much older one:—

A' that e'er my Jeanie had,
My Jeanie had, my Jeanie had,
A' that e'er my Jeanie had
Was ae bawbie.
There's your plack, and my plack,
And your plack, and my plack,
And Jeanie's bawbie.

Bawsont or bawsins, marked with white on the face, as in cattle; of uncertain etymology, but possibly connected with bash, the forehead.

The stirk stands i' the tether,
And our braw bawsint yade
Will carry ye hame your corn;
What wad ye be at, ye jade?
—Wood and Married and a'.

Bawtie, a watch-dog; apparently from the Gaelic beachd, watch, observe, and tigh (pronounced tee), a house. A favourite name in Scotland for a faithful dog. The English word Tousser, which is equally common, is also from the Celtic tuisle, to struggle or contend with.

Bour'd na' in Bawtie, lest he bite (i.e., do not play tricks or jest with the watch-dog, lest he bite you).

Bazil, a sot, a fool; of unknown etymology, but possibly connected with the Gaelic peasa-nach, an impertinent person.

He scorned to sock mang weirdless fellows,
Wi' menseless bazils in an alehouse.
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arna's.

Beak or beek—common in Ayrshire and Mearns—to sit by a fire and exposed to the full heat of it.

A lion,
To recreate his limbs and take his rest,
Beakand his breast and bellie at the sun,
Under a tree lay in the fair forest.
—ROBERT HENRYSON in The Evergreen:
The Lion and the Mouse.

Beastie, an affectionate diminutive of beast, applied to any small and favourite animal.

Wee, sleekit, cowerin', timorous beastie,
Oh, what a panic's in thy breastie!
Thou needna start awa sae hastie,
Wi' bickerin' brattle.

—BURNS: To a Mouse.

Beck, to curtsy.

"It's aye gude to be ceevil," as the auld wife said when she beckit to the deevil.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Bed-fast, confined to bed or bed-ridden. In English, fast as a suffix is scarcely used except in steadfast, i.e., fast fixed to the stead place or purpose.

For these eight or ten months I have been ailing, sometimes bed-fast and sometimes not.—BURNS: Letter to Cunningham.

An earth-fast or yird-fast stane is a large stone firmly fixed in the earth. Faith-fast, truth-fast, and hope-fast are beautiful phrases, unused by English writers. If faithful and truthful, faithless and truthless, are permissible, why not faith-fast, truth-fast, and hope-fast?

Beet, to feed or add fuel to a fire or flame; from the Gaelic beatha, life, food, and beathaich, to feed, to nourish.

May Kennedy's far-honoured name
Lang beet his hymeneal flame.

—BURNS: To Gavin Hamilton.

It warms me, it charms me,
To mention but her name;
It heats me, it beets me,
And sets me a' aflame.

—BURNS: Epistle to Davie.

I wonderin' gaze on her stately steps,
And beet my hopeless flame.

—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Bonny Lady Ann.

Beltain, the fire of Bel or Baal, kindled by the Druids annually on the first morning of May direct from the rays of the sun. Ben Ledi, in Perthshire—the hill of God, as the name signifies in Gaelic—was the most sacred of all the hills, on the summit of which this imposing ceremony was performed. The name of Bel or Baal is derived from the Gaelic beatha or bea (th silent), life, and uile, all; whence Bel, Beul, or Baal, the life of all, and tain, a corruption of teine, the fire. The ceremony was also performed in Ireland in pre-Christian times on the 21st of June. The word "Beltane" is of frequent occurrence in the ballad poetry of Scotland, and in conjunction with "Yule" or Christmas is by no means obsolete; as in the phrase, "The love that is hot at Beltane may grow could ere Yule."

Belyve, by-and-bye, immediately. This word occurs in Chaucer and in many old English romances.

Hie we belyve

And look whether Ogie be alive.

—Romance of Sir Otuel.

Belyve the elder bairns come droppin' in.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Bicker, a drinking-cup, a beaker, a turn; also a quarrel.

Fill high the foaming bicker!
Body and soul are mine, quoth he,
I'll have them both for liquor.

—The Gin Fiend and his Three Houses.

Setting my staff wi' a' my skill

To keep me sicker;

Though leeward whiles, against my will,

I took a bicker.

—BURNS: Death and Doctor Hornbook.

Bicker means rapid motion, and, in a secondary and very common sense, quarrelling, fighting, a battle. Sir Walter Scott refers to the bickers or battles between the boys of Edinburgh High School and the Gutterbluids of the streets. In "Hallowe'en" Burns applies bickering to the motion of running water:—

Whiles glistened to the nightly rays,

Wi' bickerin', dancin' dazzle.

—R. DRENNAN.

Bide, to stop, to delay, to wait, to dwell or abide.

Bield, a shelter. Of uncertain etymology, perhaps from build.

Better a wee bush than nae bield.

Every man bends to the bush he gets bield frae.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Beneath the random bield of clod or stane.

—BURNS: To a Mountain Daisy.

Bien, comfortable, agreeable, snug, pleasant; from the French bien, well. Lord Neaves was of opinion that this derivation was doubtful, but suggested no other. If the French etymology be inadmissible, the Gaelic can supply bin, which means harmonious, pleasant, in good order; which is perhaps the true root of the word.

While frosty winds blaw in the drift

Ben to the chimla lug,

I grudge a wee the great folk's gift

That live sae bien and snug.

—BURNS: Epistle to Davie.

Bien's the but and ben.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: The Father's Kver.

Bier or beir, a lament, a moan.

As I went forth to take the air

Intil an evening clear,

I spied a lady in a wood

Making a heavy bier;

Making a heavy bier, I wot,

While the tears dropped frae her e'en,

And aye she sighed and said Alas!

For Jock o' Hazelgreen.

—Old Ballad, on which SIR WALTER SCOTT modelled his "Jock o' Hazeldean."

Jamieson says that beir (not bier) is allied to the Icelandic byre, a tempest, and to old English bri, byre, bine, force; but it is of more probable origin in the Gaelic buir, to lament, to whine; whence probably the prevalence of the custom among the Celtic nations of moaning over the dead body, and chanting the doleful coronach or death-wail, came afterwards to be applied to the bier, or table, board, or plank, on which the corpse was extended, or the coffin in which it was placed.

Bigly, beautiful; origin unknown.

Will ye come to my bigly bower,

An' drink the wine wi' me?

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Scottish Ballads.

Billies, fellows, comrades, young men; a term of familiarity and affection.

When chapman billies leave the street,

And drouthy neebors neebors meet.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Rise up! rise up now, billie dear,

Rise up! I speak these words to see

Whether thou'st gotten thy deadly wound,

Or if God and good leaching may succour thee.—Border Minstrelsy.

"This word," says Jamieson,

"is probably allied to German billig, the Belgian billiks, equals, as denoting those that are on a footing as to age, rank, relation, affection, or employment."

This is an error. In German, billig means moderate in price, fair, just, equitable, reasonable. The Lowland Scotch billie is the same as the English fellow; and both are derived from the Gaelic ba-laoch, a shepherd, a cowherd, a husbandman; from ba, cows, plural of bo, a cow, and laoch, a lad, a young man.

Bink or bunker, a bench; called in America a bunk.

I set him in beside the bink,
And gied him bread and ale to drink.

—HERD'S Collection: The Brisk Young Lad.

A winnock (window) bunker in the east,
Where sat Auld Nick in shape o' beast.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Bird or burd, a term of endearment, applied to a young woman or child.

And by my word, the bonnie bird
In danger shall not tarry,
And though the storm is raging wild,
I'll row ye o'er the ferry.

—THOMAS CAMPBELL.

Birdalane or burdalane. A term of sorrowful endearment, applied to an only child, especially to a girl, to signify that she is without household comrades or companions.

And Newton Gordon, birdalane,
And Dalgetie both stout and keen.

—SCOTT'S Minstrelsy.

Birkie, a young and conceited person; from the Gaelic biorach, a two-year-old heifer; bioraiche, a colt; applied in derision to a very young man who is lively but not over-wise.

Ye see yon birkie ca'd a lord,
Wha struts and stares and a' that.

—BURNS: A Man's a Man.

"And besides, ye donnard carle!" continued Sharpitlaw, "the minister did say that he thought he knew something of the features of the birkie that spoke to him in the Park."—SCOTT: Heart of Midlothian.

"Weel, Janet, ye ken when I preach you're almost always fast asleep before I've well given out my text; but when any of these young men from St. Andrews preach for me, I see you never sleep a wink. Now that's what I call no using me as you should do." "Hoot, sir," was the reply, "is that a'? I'll soon tell you the reason o' that. When you preach, we a' ken the Word o' God is safe in your hands; but when thae young birkies tak it in hand, ma certie! but it tak's us a' to look after them."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Birl, to pour out liquor; probably from the same root as the English purl, as in the phrase "a purling stream," probably derived from the ancient but now obsolete Gaelic bior, a well; bioral, pertaining to a well or like a well.

There were three lords birling at the wine
On the dowie dens o' Yarrow.

—MOTHERWELL'S Ancient Minstrelsy.

Oh, she has birled these merry young men
With the ale, but and the wine.

—Border Minstrelsy: Fause Foodrage.

Birs, the thick hair or bristles on the back of swine.

The souter gave the sow a kiss.
Humph! quo' she, it's a' for my birs!

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Bismeres or bismar, the keeper of a brothel, a bawd; from the Gaelic baois, lust, lewdness, and mathair (pronounced ma-air), mother; also a prostitute. Jamieson derives the word from the Anglo-Saxon, and quotes Rudd—"Bismer, contumelia, aut bismerian, illudere, dehonoreare polluere." The Gaelic derivation is more satisfactory than that from the hybrid language called Anglo-Saxon, which is but inchoate and primitive old English based upon corrupted Celtic, with superadded Dutch and Flemish.

Bit and brat. To earn "bit and brat" is to earn food and raiment; from the Gaelic biadh, food, and brat, a rag, a garment, or clothing.

Bittock, a small bit or piece. When a wayfarer on the road asks of a chance passer-by at what distance is the place to which he is bound, the probable reply is, that it is two, three, or any other number of miles "and a bittock," signifying that the respondent will not pledge himself to the exactitude of his reply, adding, with the proverbial cautiousness popularly ascribed in England to his countrymen, that there may be a bittock added to his computation; though the qualifying bittock has often been found to exceed the primary estimate.

Black-mail. The word mail is derived from the Gaelic màl, rent, tax, or tribute; and màla, a bag, a sack, a purse, a budget to contain the tribute. Why the particular exaction called black-mail, levied by many Highland chieftains in former times to ensure the protection of the herds of cattle passing through their territories to southern markets, received the epithet of black has never been clearly explained. The word has been supposed by some to designate the moral turpitude and blackness of character of those who exacted such a tax, and by others it has been conjectured that black-mail derived its name from the black cattle of the Highlands, for whose protection against thieves and caterans the tribute was levied; while yet another set of etymologists have set forth the opinion that plack-mail, not black-mail, was the proper word, derived from the small Scottish coin—the plaque or plack—in which the tribute was supposed to be collected. But as mail is undoubtedly from the Gaelic, and as black-mail was a purely Highland extortion, and so called at a time when few resident Highland chiefs and none of their people spoke English, it is possible that black is not to be taken in the English sense, but that it had, like its associated word, mail, a Gaelic origin. In that language, blathaich—pronounced (the th silent) blá-aich—signifies to protect, to cherish. Thus black-mail meant the tribute or tax of protection. If black, the colour, were really intended, the Highlanders would have used their own word and called the tribute màl-dubh. The Gaelic blathaich has the secondary meaning of to heat. In the same sense, the Flemish has blaken, to warm, to animate, to burn. In connection with the idea of warming, the Scottish language has several words which can scarcely be explained by black in the English sense. The first is black-burning, which Jamieson says is "used in reference to shame when it is so great as to produce deep blushing, or to crimson the countenance." This phrase is equivalent to the English, a burning shame, when the cheeks burn or glow, not with black, but with red. The second is black-fishing, which Jamieson defines as fishing for salmon by night by means of torches. He explains the epithet black in this instance by suggesting that "the fish" are black or foul when they come up the streams to deposit their spawn, an explanation which is wholly inadmissible. The third and fourth phrases are black-foot and black-sole, which both mean "a confidant in love affairs, or one who goes between a lover and his mistress endeavouring to bring the cold or coy fair one to compliance." In these instances, black is certainly more related to the idea of warming, inciting, animating, than to that of blackness. Black-foot and black-sole in reality mean hot-foot and hot-sole, as in the corresponding phrase, hot-haste, applied to the constant running to-and-fro of the go-between. Black-winter, which signifies, according to Jamieson, "the last cart-load of grain brought home from the harvest-field," is as difficult as either of the phrases previously-cited to associate with the idea of blackness, either moral or physical; but rather with that of comfort, warmth—or provision for the winter months. The winter itself may be metaphorically black, but not by any extension of meaning or of fancy can the epithet black, in colour, be associated with a cart-load of grain. There are two other equivalent phrases in Scottish use in which black is an epithet, namely, black victual, meaning pulse, beans and peas, and black crop, which has the same signification. Jamieson says these crops are so called because they are always green, and extends the meaning to turnips, potatoes, &c., for the same reason! But black cannot be accepted as equivalent to green.

Of all the derivations ever suggested for black-mail, the word on which this disquisition concerning black started, the most unfortunate is that of Jamieson, who traces it to "the German blakmal, and to the Flemish blaken, to rob." It is sufficient for the refutation of Jamieson to state that there is no such word as blakmal in the German language, and that blaken, as already observed, does not signify to rob, but to burn. In conclusion, it may be stated that the English black has long been a puzzle to the compilers of dictionaries. There is no trace of it to be found in the sense of colour in any of the Teutonic languages. Black in German is schwarz; in Dutch, Flemish, and Swedish, swart; in Danish, svaerte; and in old English, swarth and swarthy.

Worcester's Dictionary derives black from bleak. Mr. Wedgwood, who is one of the latest authorities, says "the original meaning of black seems to have been exactly the reverse of the present sense, viz., shining white. It is, in fact," he adds, "radically identical with the French blanc, from which it differs only in the absence of the nasal."

Perhaps it may be possible, ex fumo dare lucem, to kindle a light out of all this smoke. May not the real root of the English black (as a colour) be the Gaelic blàich, or the Flemish blaken, to burn? That which is burned is blackened. A black man, or negro, is one whose skin has been tanned or burned by the sun; and sun-burnt in this case means blackened. It may be said of this explanation, whether correct or not, that it is at all events entitled to as much consideration as those from bleak and blanc, and that it is] far more probable than either.

Black saxpence, supposed in Scottish superstition to be a magical sixpence given by the Devil in payment for the soul of the person who accepted it. The virtue of this "black" sixpence consisted in its having always a bright sixpence alongside of it; that as soon as it was taken away and spent, it was replaced by another, and so on to the "crack of doom." Jamieson supposed that the infernal sixpence was so named from its colour; but possibly, and more probably, it was thus designated from the Gaelic blathaich, protection, as being a protection against absolute poverty as long as the unholy compact existed. See Black-mail and Black-Watch for this sense of the word black.

Black-Watch, a name given to the Highland regiment, the brave and very distinguished Forty-Second, which has fought, bled, and conquered in many a hard-won field in every part of the world, where its services were required to vindicate the right and uphold the honour of Great Britain. It is generally supposed that the name was given to them on account of the dark colour of the tartan which they wear; but the tartan is not black, but very dark green, like the tartans of many Highland clans, in which green is the predominant hue, varied by black, blue, red, or yellow stripes in some of them. It is possible, however, that black in this instance, as in black-mail, &c. (which see), signifies protection, and that the popular name of the illustrious regiment in question signifies the "protecting watch."

Blae, of a livid blue colour, sickly blue.

Blaeberries, bilberries.

The morning blae and wan.

—DOUGLAS: Translation of the Æneid.

How dow you this blae eastlin' wind,
That's like to blaw a body blind?

—BURNS.

Be in dread, O sirs! Some of you will stand with blae countenances before the tribunal of God.

—BRUCE: The Soul's Confirmation.

Blash, a gust of wind.

Amidst a glint o' sunshine comes a blash o' cauld sleet.—Noctes Ambrosiana.

Blate, shy, modest, bashful; of unknown derivation. Bleid in Gaelic is the reverse of blate in Lowland Scotch, and means impertinent, troublesome, forward, presuming.

Says Lord Frank Ker, Ye are na' blate
To bring us the news o' yer ain defeat.

—Jacobite Ballad: Johnnie Cope.

A blate cat makes a proud mouse.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Bland, to lay anything flat with violence, as the wind or a storm of rain does the corn.

Curst common sense, that imp o' hell,

This day M'Kinlay takes the flail,
And he's the boy will blaud her.

—BURNS: The Ordination.

Ochon! ochon! cries Haughton,
That ever I was born
To see the Buckie burn rin bluid,
And blauding a' the corn.

—Aberdeenshire Ballad.

Blavers. The blue cornflower.

Blavers that grow amid white land.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: The Gardener Lad.

Blaw-i'-my-lug, a flatterer, a cajoler, a wheedler; one who blows fair words into the ear of a ready listener for a selfish or sinister purpose.

Bledoch, skim-milk; from the Gaelic bleadhach or bleoghann, to milk.

She kirmed the kirm and scummed it clean,
Left the gudeman but bledoch bare.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Evergreen: The Wife of Auchtermuckty.

Blether, to talk nonsense, to be full of wind like a bladder, Bletherskite, nonsense.

Blethers, nonsense, impertinence.

Blaidry, foolish talk, from the Gaelic blaidaireachd, and bleidir, impertinence. Bletherum-skate or bletherum-skite, sometimes corrupted into bladderskite, are derivatives of this word, "'Ye blethrin loon' and 'ye skyte,'" says Cromek, the editor of the "Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song," "are terms of familiar reproach still in use, and are applied to those satiric rogues who have the art of mingling falsehood with truth with admirable art."

Stringing blethers up in rhyme
For fools to sing.

—BURNS: The Vision.

Fame
Gathers but wind to blether up a name.
—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

Some are busy bletherin
Right loud that day.
—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Right scornfully she answered him,
Jog on your gate, you bladderskate—
My name is Maggie Lauder.
—SEMPLE: Maggie Lauder.

"She's better to-night," said one nurse to another. "Night's come, but it's not gone," replied her helpmate, in the full hearing of the patient, "and it's the small hours'll try her." "The small hours'll not try me as much as you do with your blethering tongues," remarked the patient with perfect sang-froid.—A Visit to the London Hospitals, March 23, 1870.

I knew Burns's "Blethering Bitch," who in his later years lived in Tarbolton, and earned a scanty living by breaking stones on the road. In taking a walk round the hill mentioned in "Death and Dr. Hornbook," I came upon Jamie Humphrey (such was his name) busy at work, and after talking with him a short time, I ventured to ask him, "Is it true, Jamie, that you are Burns's blethering bitch?" "Aye, deed am I, and mony a guid gill I hae gotten by it!" This was a broad hint; but I did not take it.—R. DRENNAN.

Blinter, to flicker like a flame about to expire for want of nourishment.

Blirt, a sudden burst of grief or anger, also to weep, sob, and lament simultaneously. A "blirt of greeting" signifies an outburst of tears. The English blurt is akin to the Scottish blirt, though not exactly synonymous, and is principally used to signify a sudden and unpremeditated disclosure of what ought to have been kept secret, as in the phrase "He blurted out the truth," or "He blurted out an oath." The root both of blirt and blurt is the Gaelic blaor, to cry out or roar, and blaorte, cried out or roared.

Blob, a large round drop of water or other liquid. A similar word, bleb, now obsolete, was once used in England to signify an air-bubble, and, in its form of blebster, is the root of blister.

We look on this troubled stream of the generations of men to as little purpose almost as idle boys do on dancing blebs or bubbles on the water.—SIR THOMAS MORE: Consolations of the Soul.

Her e'en the clearest blob o' dew outshining.—ALLAN RAMSAY.

The bonnie red rose,
Wet wi' the blobs o' dew.

—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM.

Blouter, to bluster or talk idly; Gaelic bladair, to talk idly.

Cacklin' about! Coleridge or blouterin' about Byron.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Blunk, to mismanage or spoil anything by clumsy, inexpert, or stupid handling; also a dull, stolid, and foolishly inert person. Jamieson thinks it is derived from the Icelandic blunda, sleepy-headed. It is more probably from the Gaelic blonach or blonag, fat, greasy; whence fat-headed and stupid.

Bluntie. In the Dictionary of the Scottish Language by an anonymous author (Edinburgh, 1818), bluntie is described as a stupid fellow. Jamieson has "blunt, stupid, bare, naked," and "bluntie, a sniveller," which he derives from the Teutonic blutten, homo stolidus.

They mool me sair, and haud me doun,
And gar me look like bluntie, Tam;
But three short years will soon wheel roun',
And then comes ane-and-twenty, Tam.

—BURNS.

The etymology of the English word blunt is uncertain, but as it signifies the opposite of sharp, the Scottish bluntie may be accepted as a designation of one who is not sharp or clever. No English dictionary suggests any etymology that can reasonably be accepted, the nearest being plump, round, or rounded without a point. "Blunt," the slang word for money, is supposed by some to be derived from the name of Sir John Blunt, a rich director of the South Sea Company in the year 1720.

Bob, to make a curtsey, to bend, to bow down.

Sweet was the smell of flowers, blue, white,
and red,

The noise of birds was maist melodious,
The bobbing boughs bloom'd broad abune my head.

—R. HENRYSON: The Lion and the Mouse.

When she cam' ben she bobbit.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

Weel done, quo' he; play up, quo' she;
Weel bobbi'd, quo' Rob the Ranter,
It's worth my while to play indeed
When I hae sic a dancer.

—Maggie Lauder.

When she came ben she bobbit.—BURNS.

Out came the auld maidens a' bobbin' discreetly.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: The Auld Beggar Man.

When she came ben she bobbit fu' low,
And what was his errand he soon let her know.

Surprised was the laird when the lady said
Na!

As wi' a laigh curtsie she turned her a wa.
—The Laird o' Cockpen.

Bodle, a small Scottish coin, of less value than a bawbee, the sixth part of an English penny.

Black Madge, she is prudent, has sense in her noddle,

Is douce and respectit; I care na' a bodle.
—JOANNA BAILLIE.

Bonailie, a parting drink, a stirrup-cup; a deoch an dorus, offered to and partaken with a departing guest, with wishes for a good and pleasant journey; a bon voyage. The word, sometimes written bonalais or bonally, is a corrupt spelling of the French bonne allée, or bon aller.

Bonnie, beautiful, good-natured, and cheerful—the three qualities in combination—as applied to a woman; applied to natural objects, it simply signifies beautiful, as in "Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon." This is an old English word, used by Shakespeare and Ben Jonson, and still current in the Northern English counties, as well as in Scotland.

Bonnieness, a word that conveys the sense of both prettiness and goodness, that are sometimes, but ought never, to dwell apart.

Bonnieness gaed to the water to wash,
And prettiness gaed to the barn to thrash;
Gae tell my maister to pay me my fee,
For bonnieness winna let prettiness be.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

Bonspiel, sport or play.

I hae been at mony a bonspiel, but I ne'er saw such a congregation on the ice before.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Boodie, a ghost, a sprite, a hobgoblin; by some derived from bode, a message, the German bote, a messenger, and by others, with more probability, from the Gaelic bodach, a spectre—a word which is also applied irreverently to an ill-favoured and churlish old man.

Borrow, to ransom, and not, as in English, to effect a loan.

And in cam' her brother dear,

A waeftul man was he.

I'd gie a' the lands I hae,

Bonnie Jean, to borrow thee.

Oh, borrow me, brother, borrow me,

Or borrowed I'll never be,

For I gar'd kill my ain dear lord,

An' life's nae pleasure to me.

—The Laird o' Warristoun.

Bourack or bourock, a name given by children to the little mounds of sand or earth that they raise on the sea-shore or in their playgrounds in imitation of castles or houses;—a diminutive, apparently, of the word bower, a lady's chamber. The word is sometimes used for a shepherd's hut or shieling. In some parts of Scotland it signifies a heap or mound of any kind, and also metaphorically a heap or crowd of people.

We'll ne'er big *bourock*s i' the sand together (Old Proverb), i.e., we'll never be familiar or closely allied in sentiment or purpose.

Bourd, a jest, a joke; also to jest, to play tricks with. In old English, bord. From the Gaelic burt, mockery.

The wizard could no longer bear her bord,
But, bursting forth in laughter, to her said.

—SPENSER: Faerie Queene.

I'll tell the bourd, but nae the body.

A sooth bourd is nae bourd.

They that bourd wi' cats may count upon scarts.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Bouse, to drink deeply, to revel; whence the colloquial English word "boozy."

Then let him bouse and deep carouse

Wi' bumpers flowing o'er,

Till he forgets his loves and debts,

And minds his griefs no more.—BURNS.

And though bold Robin Hood

Would with his Maid Marian

Sup and bouse from horn and can.

—KEATS.

Brae, the brow or side of a hill; from the Gaelic bruaich, a hill side, a steep.

We twa hae run about the braes,

And pu'd the gowans fine,

But mony a weary foot we've trod

Sin auld lang syne.—BURNS.

Brander, a gridiron, also a toast-ing-fork; from the Teutonic brennen, to burn; gebrannt, burned.

Brander, a gridiron, i.e., a burner, on which to submit food to the direct action of the fire without the intervention of water; from the Teutonic brennen, to burn, and gelvannt, burnt.

Brander-bannock, a cake heated on a gridiron; a common mode of preparing oaten cakes in Scotland.

Brankie, gaudy, showy. Brankit, vain, conceited, proud of one's fine clothes. Brankin' a great show of finery.

Where hae ye been sae braw, lad?
Where hae ye been sae brankie, O?
Where hae ye been sae braw, lad?
Cam' ye by Killicrankie, O?

—JOHNSON'S Musical Museum.

Branne, the calf of the leg; whence the English brawny, muscular.

Your stocking shall be like the cabbage leaf,
That is baith braid and lang,
Narrow, narrow at the cute (the instep or ankle),
And braid, braid at the branne.

—Ballad of the Gardener, from Kinlock's Collection.

Brash, a sickness, a rash, an eruption.

The lady's gane to her chamber,
A moanful woman was she,
As gin she had taken a sudden brash,
An' were about to dee.

—The Gay Gosshawk.

Brash, a sudden gust of wind, also a tuzzle or fight; brashy or braushie, stormy.

Brat, a rag or clothes; from the Gaelic brat, a covering, a mantle, a rag; also bratach, a flag, a banner; whence perhaps the contemptuous English term of brat, for a beggar's child, in allusion to the rags in which it is clad.

We've aye had bit and brat, John,
Great blessings here below;
And that helped to keep peace at home,
John Anderson my jo.

—From the old version of "John Anderson my Jo," abridged, amended, and purified by ROBERT BURNS.

Bratchet, a contemptuous or angry term for a troublesome or mischievous child; a diminutive of brat, a child, so called from the Gaelic brat, a rag; synonymous with another Scottish phrase for a poor man's child, as used by Burns, "a smytrie o' wee duddie (ragged) weans."

Brattle, clatter, or any noise made by the rapid collision of hard substances; possibly from be-rattle, the augmentative of the English word rattle.

List'ning the doors an' windows rattle,
I thought me on the ourie cattle,
Or silly sheep, that tide the brattle
O' winter war.

—BURNS: A Winter Night.

Breathin'. "I'll do't in a breathin'," instantan, in the time which it would take to draw a breath. This phrase is far superior to the vulgar English "in a jiffy," or to the still more intolerable slang "the twinkling of a bedpost."

Bree, the juice, the essence, the spirit. Barley-bree, the juice of the barley, i.e., whisky or ale.

Brew is to extract the spirit or essence of barley, malt, hops, &c. Both bree and brew are directly derived from the Gaelic brigh, spirit, juice, &c. The Italians have brio, spirit, energy, life, animation. From this source is derived the English slang word a "brick," applied to a fine, high-spirited, good fellow. Various absurd attempts have been made to trace the expression to a Greek source in a spurious anecdote borrowed from Aristotle, who speaks of a tetragonos aner or "four-cornered man," supposed in the slang of the Universities to signify a brick.

Breeks, the nether garments of a man, trousers, trews, breeches. The vulgar English word breeches is derived from the breech, the part of the body which they cover. The Scottish word has a more dignified origin in the Gaelic breaghaid, attire, dress, ornament, and breaghaid, adorn, embellish, "from which Celtic word," says Ainsworth in his Latin Dictionary, "the Romans derived bracca and braccatus, wearing trews, like the Gauls."

This breeks o' mine, my only pair,
I wad hae gien them aff my hurdies
For ae blink o' the bonnie burdies.
—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Brent or brant, high, steep; also smooth.

Her fair brent brow,
Smooth as the unwrinkled deep.
—ALLAN RAMSAY.

John Anderson my jo, John,
When we were first acquaint,
Your locks were like the raven,
Your bonnie brow was brent.

—BURNS: John Anderson my Jo.

In "John Anderson my Jo," the auld wife means that her husband's brow was smooth. I believe that brent in this passage is the past-participle of burn. Shining is one of the effects of burning. I think the word is always used to mean smooth, unwrinkled—as in the Scottish phrase brent new, the English brant new, shining with all the gloss of newness.—R. DRENNAN.

Brim, fierce, disastrous, fatal, furious; from the Gaelic breamas, mischief, mischance.

The brim battle of the Harlaw.
—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Evergreen.

Bring home, to be delivered of a child.

Now when nine months were past and gone,
The lady she brought home a son.
—BUCHAN'S Ballads: Lord Dingwall.

Brook, to spot, or soil, or blacken with soot; brookit, having a dirty face; and brookie, a nickname either for a sweep or a blacksmith. Bruckit is tanned by the sun or freckled. The root is the Gaelic brucach, spotted, freckled, speckled, particularly in the face.

Broostle, to perspire profusely; also to be in a great hurry, bustle, or confusion. From the Teutonic bravs, bustle, noise, or tumult; brausen, to ferment, to rush, to roar, to snort with anger or impatience.

Brownie, a household sprite in the ancient and not yet extinct superstition of Scotland, who, if conciliated, performed domestic duties, and made himself useful and agreeable, similar in his character to Puck or Robin Good-fellow in England. From the Gaelic bronn, a gift, a favour.

Brown study. This phrase, to signify deep, sad, or melancholy meditation, was originally Scotch, but has long become familiar in English. It has puzzled all the philologists, who persist in deriving almost every English word and phrase from the Teutonic, the Greek, or the Latin, to the exclusion of the Celtic, from which even these three languages are largely derived. But they have made no guesses superior to that which would trace it to a brow study, because those who fall into brown studies often knit their brows in deep thought! The real source of the word is the Gaelic bron, sorrow, grief, sadness, melancholy, mourning; bronag, a sorrowful woman; bron bhrat, a mourning cloth, a cerement or mortcloth; bronach, sorrowful, and bronadh, lamentation. This explanation ought to satisfy even the Keltophobists, and teach them to "rest and be thankful" in their study of this particular colloquialism.

Bruik, to enjoy, to possess; from the Teutonic brauchen, to make use of. Was braucht es? What is the use of it?

Weel bruik ye o' yon broun, broun bride,
Between ye and the wa',
And sae will I o' my winding-sheet,
That suits me best of a'.

—JAMIESON'S Collection: Ballad of Lammikin.

Brulzie or brulyie, a disturbance, a commotion, a quarrel. This word seems to be the root of the English brawl, broil, embroil, and embroilment, and the French embrouiller; all derivable from the Gaelic bruill, to crush, to beat, to fight, to thrash.

Bannocks o' bear-meal, bannocks o' barley!
Wha' in a brulzie will first cry a parley?
Never the lads wi' the bannocks o' barley;
Here's to the Highlandman's bannocks o' barley!

—JOHNSON'S Musical Museum.

Brumble, to make a rumbling noise. The English rumble and the Lowland Scotch brumble are synonymous, and both appear to be derived from the Teutonic brummen, to rush audibly like a rapid stream; to gurgle, to growl.

Bryttle, to cut up venison.

And Johnnie has bryttled the deer sae weel,
And has feasted his gude blude-hounds.

—Border Minstrelsy: Johnnie of Braidislie.

Bubbly-jock, a turkey-cock.

Some of the idiot's friends coming to visit him at a farmhouse where he resided, reminded him how comfortable he was, and how grateful he ought to be for the care taken of him. He admitted the fact, but he had his sorrows and troubles like wiser men. He stood in awe of the great turkey-cock of the farm, which used to run and gobble at him. "Aye! aye!" he said, unburthening his heart, "I'm very weel aff, nae doubt; but eh! man, I'm sair hadden down by the Bubbly-jock!"

DEAN RAMSAY.

Buckie, a whelk or periwinkle.

An' there'll be partans [crabs] an' buckies.
—The Blithesome Bridal.

Buckle-to, to marry; derived from the idea of fastening or joining together. The word occurs in a vulgar English song to a very beautiful Scottish air, which was written in imitation of the Scottish manner by Tom D'Urfey in the reign of Charles II. It has been long popular under the title of "Within a Mile of Edinburgh Town."

Buckle-beggar signified what was once called a hedge-priest, who pretended to perform the ceremony of marriage. To "buckle with a person" was to be engaged in argument with another.

"Buff nor styce," a common colloquialism. To say of any one that "he would neither buff nor styce," means that he would neither do one thing or another, that he did not know his own mind, or that he was so obstinately wedded to his own purpose that nothing could make him deviate from it. It is probably a corruption of "he would neither be off nor stay." Jamieson, however, derives buff from the Teutonic bof, a cheer made by mariners; and thinks that stye may refer to the act of mounting the shrouds, from the Swedish stiga, to ascend! He has thus had recourse to two languages to help him out of a difficulty, when one, and that his own, would have been sufficient.

He would neither buff nor stye for father or mother, friend or foe.—GALT: The Entail.

Buirdly, strong and stalwart, hearty, well-built.

Buirdly chieils [fellows]
Are bred in sic a way as this is.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Burnewin, a contraction of "Burn-the wind," the popular and familiar name for a blacksmith.

Busk, to adorn, to dress; from the Gaelic busgadh, a head-dress, an adornment for the person; busgainnich, to dress, to adorn, to prepare.

A bonnie bride is soon buskit.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Busk ye, busk ye, my bonnie bride,
Busk ye, busk ye, my winsome marrow.
—HAMILTON of Bangor.

But. This word in Scotland long preserved the meaning it once had in England of "without," and was derived etymologically from "be out," of which it is an abbreviation. It remains in the heraldic motto of the Clan Chattan, "Touch not the cat but the glove!" It does duty in the humorous Jacobite song, in ridicule of George I., the Elector of Hanover:—

Wha the deil hae we gotten for a king,
 But a wee, wee German lairdie;
 And when we gaed to bring him hame,
 He was delvin' in his yairdie,
 Sheughin kail and layin' leeks,
But the hose, and but the breeks,
 And up his beggar duds he cleeks,
 The wee, wee German lairdie.

But and ben, the out and in, the front and back rooms of a cotter's hut.

Toddlin but and toddlin ben,
 I'm nae sooner slockened, than drouthy again.

—SIR ALEXANDER BOSWELL: A Matrimonial Duet.

Had siller been made in the kist to lock by,
 It wadna been round, but square as a dye,
 Whereas by its shape ilka body may see
 It aye was designed it should circulate free.
 Then we'll toddle but, and we'll toddle ben,
 An' aye when we get it, we'll part wi't again.—Ibid.

Byspel, an accidental piece of good fortune; a wonderful stroke of luck or dexterity. An epithet applied, generally in a half-hearted spirit of laudation, to any person of rare good qualities or successful rise in the world; as in the phrase "He's just a byspel." The word is from the Teutonic beispiel, an example; literally a by-play. In this sense it is sometimes held to signify an illegitimate or a love-child, a "by-blow," a bastard.

Byssim, a monster, also a worthless and shameless woman. Supposed to be from the Icelandic bysn, a monster, a prodigy. The German böse, wicked, and the Gaelic baois, lust, libidinousness, and also madness, have been suggested as the root of this word. A third derivation is worthy of study, that from baoth (baò), wicked, and smuain, thoughts, whence baò-smuain, quasi bissim or byssom, a wicked thought, or a person with wicked thoughts. The word Bezonian, which has puzzled Shakespearian commentators to explain, may be allied.

Ca', to drive, or drive in, to smite; also to contend or fight; from the Gaelic cath, pronounced ca', to smite, to fight.

I'll cause a man put up the fire,
 Anither ca' in the stake,
 And on the head o' yon high hill
 I'll burn you for his sake.

BUCHAN'S Ballads: Young Prince James.

Every naig was ca'd a shoe on,
 The smith and thee got roaring fu' on.
 —BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Ca' cannie! an exhortation to beware, to take heed or care as to what you are doing or saying; ca', to drive, and cannie, cautious or cautiously.

Cadgie—sometimes written caigie—cheerful, sportive, wanton, friendly; possibly from the old Gaelic cad, a friend, whence, according to some philologists, cadie, a lad (used in the sense of kindness and familiarity); but, according to others, from the French cadet, a younger born.

A cock-laird fu' cadgie
Wi' Jeanie did meet;
He haused her, he kissed her,
And ca'd her his sweet.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

Yon ill-tongued tinkler, Charlie Fox,
May taunt you wi' his jeers and shocks;
But gie't him het, my hearty cocks,
E'en cove the cadie!
And send him to his dicing-box
And sportin' lady.

—BURNS: Author's Earnest Cry and Prayer.

Cair, to strain through. "This word," says Jamieson, "is used in Clydesdale, and signifies to extract the thickest part of broth or hotch-potch while dining or supping." It is probably from the Gaelic cir, a comb; whence also the English word to curry a horse, and curry-comb, the comb used for the purpose.

Caird, a tinker.

Close the awmrie, steek the kist,
Or else some gear will soon be miss'd;
Tell the news in brugh and glen,
Donald Caird's come again.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

From the Gaelic ceard, a smith, a wright, a workman; with the prefix teine, fire, is derived the English tin-caird or tinker, a fire-smith. Johnson, ignorant of Celtic, traced tinker from tink, because tinkers struck a kettle and produced a tinkling noise to announce their arrival.

Caller, fresh, cool. There is no exact English synonym for this word. "Caller herrin," "Caller haddie," and "Caller ow" are familiar cries to Edinburgh people, and to all strangers who visit that beautiful city.

Sae sweet his voice, sae smooth his tongue,
His breath's like caller air;
His very foot has music in't
When he comes up the stair.

—MICKLE: There's nae Luck about the House.

Upon a simmer Sunday morn,
When Nature's face is fair,
I walked forth to view the corn
And snuff the caller air.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Camsteerie, crooked, confused, unmanageable; from the Gaelic cam, crooked, and stiuir, to steer or lead.

The phalanx broken into pieces like camsteerie clouds.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Cannie, knowing, but gentle; not to be easily deceived, yet not sly or cunning. A very expressive word, often used by Englishmen to describe the Scotch, as in the phrase, "a canny Scotsman," one who knows what he is about. The word also means dexterous, clever at a bargain, and also fortunate. It is possibly derived from the Gaelic ceannaich, to buy; and is common in the North of England as well as in Scotland.

Bonny lass, canny lass, wilt thou be mine?

—The Cumberland Courtship.

He mounted his mare and he rode cannilie.

—The Laird o' Cockpen.

Hae naething to do wi' him; he's no canny.

They have need of a canny cook who have but one egg for dinner.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Cantie, joyous, merry, talkative from excess of good spirits; from the Gaelic cainnt, speech, or can, to sing.

Contented wi' little and cantie wi' mair.

—BURNS.

Some cannie wee bodie may be my lot,
An' I'll be cantie in thinking o't.

—BROCKETT'S North Country Glossary:
Newcastle Song.

The cantie auld folks.

—BURNS: The Twa Dogs.

The clachan yill had made me cantie.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Cantrip, a charm, a spell, a trick, a mischievous trick. The word is a corruption of the Gaelic word ceann, head, chief, principal, and drip, a trick.

Coffins stood roun' like open presses,
That showed the dead in their last dresses;
And by some devilish cantrip slight,
Each in its cauld hand held a light.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Burns, in the "Address to the Deil," has another example of this word, in which the humour is great and the indecency greater.
—LORD NEAVES.

Capernoity, peevish, crabbed, apt to take offence, of singular and uncertain humour.

"Me forward!" answered Mrs. Patt;
"the capernoity, old, girning ale-wife may wait long enough ere I forward it!"—
SCOTT: St. Ronan's Well.

Gaelic, cabair, a gabbler, a tattler; naitheas, mischief.

Cappernoityt, slightly deranged.

D'ye hear what auld Dominie Napier says about the mirk Monday? He says it's an eclipse—the sun and the moon fechtin' for the upper hand! But, Lord! he's a poor capernoityt creature.—Laird of Logan.

Carfuffle, agitation of mind, perplexity; from the Gaelic cearn, a twist or wrong turn, and baob, baobach, and baobhail, an alarm, a fright, a perplexity; and with the aspirate, the b pronounced as f, bhaobail, fuffle.

Troth, my lord may be turned fule outright an' he puts himsell into a carfuffle for any thing ye could bring him, Edie.—
SCOTT: The Antiquary.

Carkin', grinding, oppressively wearying, vexatious. The root of this word is the Gaelic garg, rough, from whence also gargle, the rough noise produced by a liquor to foment the throat, but not to be swallowed.

The lisping infant prattlin' on his knee
Does a' his weary carkin' cares beguile,
An' makes him quite forget his labour and his toil.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Carle, a man, a fellow; from the Teutonic kerl. This word, which was used by Chaucer, has been corrupted into the English churl, which means a rude fellow. In Scotland it still preserves its original and pleasanter signification.

The miller was a stout carle for the nones;
Full big he was of braune, and eke of bones.

—CHAUCER.

The pawky auld carle cam' ower the lea,
Wi' mony guid e'ens and guid days to me,
Saying, Kind sirs, for your courtesy,
Will you lodge a silly poor man?

—RITSON'S Caledonian Song.

Oh! wha's that at my chamber door?

Fair widow, are ye waukin'?

Auld carle, your suit give o'er,

Your love lies a' in talkin'.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

When lairds break, carles get land.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Up starts a carle, and gains good,

And thence comes a' our gentle blood.

—Idem.

My daddie is a cankered carle,

He'll no twine wi' his gear;

But let them say or let them dae,

It's a' ane to me;

For he's low down, he's in the broom,

That's waiting for me.

—JAMES CARNEGIE, 1765.

Carle, a man, or fellow, is also used adjectively for male, manly, strong, vigorous: as in carle-hemp, the largest seed-bearing stalk of hemp; carle-dodder, the largest stalk of dodder-grass; carle-heather or carlin-heather, the largest species of heather or erica; carle-tangle, the largest species of tangle or sea-weed; carle-wife, a man who does women's work; carle-cat, a tom-cat, a male cat, &c.

Ye have a stalk o' carle-hemp in you.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The carle-stalk of hemp in man—

Resolve.—BURNS.

Carle-wife, a husband who meddles too much with the household duties and privileges of the wife; a much better word than its English equivalent—a "molly-coddle."

Carline or carlin, an old woman.

Cats and carlines love to sleep i' the sun.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

That auld capricious carlin Nature.

—BURNS: To James Smith.

The Rev. Mr. Monro of Westray, preaching on the flight of Lot from Sodom, said: "The honest man and his family were ordered out of the town, and charged not to look back; but the auld carlin, Lot's wife, looked owre her shoulther, for which she was smote into a lump of sawt." And he added, with great unction: "Oh, ye people of Westray, if ye had had her, mony a day since ye wad hae putten her in the parritch-pat!"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Carp, by some commentators considered to signify to sing, by others to rehearse, from the oft-recurring phrase in old ballads recording the performances of bards and minstrels—"he harpit and he carpit."

And ay he harpit, and ay he carpit,

Till a' the nobles ga'ed o'er the floor;

But and the music was sae sweet,

The groom forgot the stable door.

—SCOTT'S Border Minstrelsy: The Lochmaben Harper.

To this passage Mr. Robert Chambers, in his "Collection of Scottish Ballads," appended the note:—"In the 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border' carpit is explained as meaning sung, but I suggest, with great deference, that it appears, from the use made of it in Barbour's 'Bruce,' that it refers to the narrative which the ancient minstrels accompanied on their instruments." But Mr. Chambers has left the doubt exactly where he found it, for the old minstrels sometimes sang and sometimes merely recited or declaimed their stories. The etymology and meaning are both as doubtful as ever. The English to carp, to cavil or find fault, is probably connected.

Carry, the driving clouds.

Mirk and rainy is the night,
No a starn (star) in a' the carry.
—TANNAHILL.

The word is derived from the Gaelic caraich, to move, to stir; caraidh, movement.

Castock, sometimes written custock, a cabbage-stalk.

There's cauld kail in Aberdeen,
An' castocks in Stra' bogie.
—DUKE OF GORDON.

Every day's no Yule-day;—cast the cat a castock.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

In their hearts they're as callous as custocks.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Cateran. A Highland cateran was a term formerly applied in the Lowlands to a Highland marauder or cattle-stealer, and generally to the Highlanders, who were all supposed to be lawless depredators on the wealth of the Lowlands. The word is probably from the Gaelic cath, a battle, a fight; cathach, a fighter or warrior; and ran, to shout, to roar; whence, by emphatic denunciation, a roaring, a violent warrior or depredator.

My love he was as brave a man
As ever Scotland bred,
Descended from a Highland clan,
A cateran to his trade.
—GILDEROY.

Cauld bark. To live in "the cauld bark," is to be dead and buried. Bark, in this metaphorical euphemism, is evidently not traceable to bark, a boat or ship, or to the bark of an animal; but is possibly from bark, skin (which see), or from berg or burg or burrow, a hill or hillock, or slight mound raised over a grave.

Cauld coal. "He has a cauld coal to blaw," i.e., he is engaged in a hopeless undertaking; there is no spark of fire in it which can be blown into a flame.

Cauldrife, cold-hearted, cool in love or friendship, indifferent-minded.

Gae, get you gone, you cauldrife wooer,
Ye sour-looking cauldrife wooer.
I straightway showed him to the door,
Sayin', Come nae mair to me, oh!

—HERD'S Collection: The Brisk Young Lad.

Cavée. According to Jamieson, this is an Aberdeenshire word, signifying a state of commotion or perturbation of mind. He suggests its derivation from the French cas vif, a matter that gives or requires activity (of mind). Is it not rather the Gaelic cabhag (ca-vag), hurry, haste, dispatch, trouble, difficulty? whence cabhagach, hasty, impetuous, hurried. Cave is used in the "Noctes Ambrosianæ" as synonymous with toss. "Gallop in' on a grey horse that caves the foam from its fiery nostrils."

Chandlers, candlesticks; the English chandeliers.

Hae ye ony pots or pans,
Or ony broken chandlers;
I am a tinker to my trade,
An' newly come frae Flanders.

As scant of siller as of grace,
 Disbanded, I'd a bad run;
 Gae tell the lady o' the place
 I've come to clout the cauldron.
 —The Tinker, or Clout the Cauldron.

Channer, to contend, to complain, to grumble, to chide, to remonstrate; from the Gaelic canran, a contentious murmuring, chiding; canranach, querulous murmuring, contentions; and canranacha, petulance, ill-humour.

The cock doth crawl, the day doth daw,
 The channerin' worm doth chide.
 —*Border Minstrelsy: The Clerk's
 Two Sons o' Ouranford.*

How the worm could channer or chide in the grave is incomprehensible, unless one of the meanings of the word is to fret or cause to fret with vexation. This interpretation has led to the supposition that "fret," in the sense of its former signification of "gnaw" or "eat," from the German fressen, Flemish freten, as in the Scripture phrase "The moth freteth the garment," is synonymous with channer. This, however, is not the case, as the Gaelic etymology suffices to prove. But neither channcering nor fretting supplies an intelligible or satisfactory explanation of the ballad-writer's meaning.

Chap, to knock; chaup, a blow.

I dreamed I was deed, and carried far, far, far up, till I came to Heaven's yett—
 when I chappit, and chappit, and chappit, till at last an angel keekit out and said,
 "Wha are ye?"—DEAN RAMSAY.

The chiel was stout, the chiel was stark,
 And wadna bide to chap nor ca',
 And Girzie, faint wi' holy wark,
 Had na the power to say him na!
 —Holy Girzie.

The Burnewin comes on like death at every chaup.
 —BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Chark, to make a grinding or grunting noise, also to complain petulantly and obstinately. A form of cark, with the substitution of ch for c or k, as in church for kirk, &c.

Cheep, to chirp or chirrup like a bird.

Ye're nae chicken for a your cheepin'.—
Proverb.

Chiel, a fellow, a youth; the same as the ancient English childe, as used by Byron in "Childe Harold." From the Gaelic gille, a youth.

The brawny, bainie ploughman chiel.
 —BURNS: Scotch Drink.
 A chiel's amang ye takin' notes.
 —BURNS.

Clachan, a village; from the Gaelic clach, a stone, and dachan, the stones or houses.

The clachan yill (ale) had made me cantie.
 —BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.
 Ye ken Jock Hornbook o' the clachan.
 —Idem.

The clachan of Aberfoyle.
 —SIR WALTER SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Many English and American tourists in Scotland, and other readers of the works of Sir Walter Scott, imagine that the "clachan of Aberfoyle" means the mill of Aberfoyle.

They derive the word from the English clock, the noise of the mill-wheel, and knowing nothing of clachan, the village, are disappointed when they find neither windmill nor watermill on the classic spot.

Clart, to defile, to make dirty.

Clarty, dirty; from the Gaelic clabar or clabhar, filth, mud, mire.

Searching auld wives' barrels;

Och on the day!

That clarty barn [dirty yeast] should stain my laurels!

But—what'll ye say?

Those movin' things ca'd wives and weans
Wad move the very hearts o' stanes.

—BURNS: On being Appointed to the Excise.

Clatch, to daub, to do any kind of work carelessly, awkwardly, recklessly, ignorantly; claught, snatched.

Claur or glaur, mud, dirt, mire; "a gowpen o' glaur," a handful of mud; "a humplock of glaur," a heap of mud.

The wee laddie, greetin', said his brither
Jock had coost a gowpen o' glaur at him and knockit him on the neb.—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Claut, to snatch, to lay hold of eagerly; something that has been got together by greed; a large heap.

Ken ye what Meg o' the Mill has gotten?
She's gotten a coof wi' a claut o' siller,
And broken the heart o' the barley miller.

—BURNS: Meg o' the Mill.

Claut is undoubtedly from the English word claw, which had the sense in olden time of to scratch, to gather together, and is in that sense still in use in some parts of England. Claut, in Scotch, is most frequently used as a noun, and is the name given to a hoe used to gather mud, &c., together; to claut the roads, to gather the mud. I don't think the world itself contains the idea of getting together a large heap by greed. I don't recognise the other meanings, "to snatch," "to lay hold of eagerly." I would use a different word to express these meanings,—to *glau*m, to *play glau*m, would fit them exactly.—R. DRENNAN.

Clavers, idle stories, silly calumnies.

Hail Poesie! thou nymph reserved;

In chase o' thee what crowds hae swerv'd

Fræ common sense, or sunk unnerv'd

'Mong heaps o' clavers.

—BURNS: On Pastoral Poets.

Claw, to flatter; from the Gaelic clù, praise, and not, as ignorantly supposed, from the English claw, to scratch with the nails, in allusion to the itch.

Claw me and I'll claw you.—Scottish Proverbs.

I laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

—SHAKESPEARE: Much Ado about Nothing.

Claymore, the Highland broadsword; from the Gaelic daid-heamh, or *glai*ve, a sword, and mor, great.

Wha on the moor a gallant clan

From boastin' foes their banners bore,

Who showed himself a better man

Or fiercer waved the broad claymore?

—SIR ALEXANDER BOSWELL.

Clepie, deceitful; from the Gaelic clibe, deceit.

Clishmaclaver, idle talk, foolish gossip, incessant gabble.

What further clish-ma-claver might been said.—BURNS: The Brigs o' Ayr.

From the Gaelic clis (clish), nimble, rapid, and clab (clabh), an open mouth; clabach, garrulous; clabairé, a babbler, a loud disagreeable talker; clabar, the clapper of a mill.

Clocking-hen, a hen engaged in the act of incubation; from clock or cluck, the cry or cackle of the hen when hatching. The word is sometimes used jocularly or contemptuously for an elderly woman or nurse.

Clocksie, lively, sprightly, vivacious, talkative; possibly from clack, talk; and that, again, from the Gaelic clach or clach, a bell; applied derisively to the tongue of a garrulous person, likened to the clapper of a bell.

The clocksie auld laird o' the Warlock Glen,
Wha stood without, half cowed, half cheerie,

Raised up the latch and cam' crouselly ben.
—JOANNA BAILLIE.

Cloot, a cloven foot; Clootie, one who is hoofed or cloven-footed, i.e., the devil.

O thou, whatever title suit thee,
Auld Hornie, Satan, Nick, or Clootie.
—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Cloot (pronounced clute, long French u) is not a hoof, but the half of a hoof. We speak of a horse's hoof, and of a cow's cloots, and apply this latter word only to the feet of those animals that divide the hoof.—R. DRENNAN.

Clour, a lump on the flesh caused by a heavy blow.

That cane o' yours would gie a clour on a man's head eneuch to produce a phrenological faculty.—PROFESSOR WILSON: Noctes Ambrosianae.

Clour is a heavy blow—the lump is only the result of a clour.—R. DRENNAN.

Clout, a rag; cloutie, a little rag, baby-clouts, baby-clothes. Clout also signifies a patch, or to patch, to mend, as in the old song of "Clout the Cauldron" (mend the kettle).

Wha my baby-clouts will buy?

—Old Song.

A countryman in a remote part of Aberdeenshire got a newly coined sovereign in the days when such a thing was seldom seen, and went about showing it to his friends and neighbours for the charge of a penny each sight. Evil days unfortunately overtook him, and he was obliged to part with his beloved coin. A neighbour one day called upon him and asked for a sight of his sovereign. "Ah! man," said he, "it's gane; but I'll let ye see the cloutie it was rowed (wrapped) in for a banabee!"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Cluff, to strike with the fist, to slap; "a cluff i' the lug," a box on the ear. The word is akin to the English fisticuff and to cuff.

Clunk, the gurgling, confused sound of liquor in a bottle or cask when it is poured out; equivalent to the English glug in the song of "Gluggity Glug." It is derived by Jamieson from the Danish glunk and the Swedish klunka, which have the same meaning.

Sir Violino, with an air
That showed a man o' spunk,
Wished unison between the pair,
And made the bottle clunk.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

An old English song has "and let the cannikin clink," which is obviously from the same root, though clunk is more expressive of a dull sound than clink is.

Clyte, a fall; to stop in the midst of a set speech for want of words or ideas, and sit down suddenly. "I couldna find words to continue my speech," said a Glasgow bailie, "and sae I clyted."

I fairly clyted
On the cauld earth.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Clyte, a heavy, sudden kind of fall. I have generally heard the word as a verb used in connection with the word played—"It played clyte at my heels," "He got as far as the road, and then played clyte."
—R. DRENNAN.

Clytie-lass, a servant girl whose duty is to carry out of the house all filth or ordure, and to deposit it on the midden or elsewhere. The first word is apparently from the Gaelic cuil-aite, the back place or latrine, from cuil or cul, back, and aite, a place, whence by abbreviation clyte and clytie.

Cock. This syllable, which enters into the composition of many words and phrases both in Lowland Scotch and modern English, has generally been associated with its supposed derivation from cock, the name given to the male of birds, and especially to the familiar gallinaceous barn-door fowl that "crows in the morning." Its true derivation, however, is from the Gaelic coc, which means to elevate, to erect, to stand up, to throw high, to lift, as in such phrases as a "cocked-hat," a "cockade," "cock up your beaver," "cock-sure" (manifestly or presumedly sure, or pretending to be so), "cock-a-hoop," and many others. It is more common in Lowland Scotch than in English. To cock, signifies to mount one boy on the back of another for punishment on the posteriors; to cock-shy, to throw a stone or other missile high in the air; cock-a-penny or cock-a-pentic, to live beyond one's income for pride or ostentation, or the disinclination to appear as poor as one is in reality by expending more pennies than one has honestly got; cockie-vain, conceited, arrogant, stuck up; cockie-ridie, a game among children, when one rides on the shoulders of another; a cock-horse, a wooden horse, on which children mount for amusement; cock-laird, a small landed proprietor, who affects the dignity and gives himself the airs of a great one; cock-headed or cockle-headed, vain, conceited, whimsical, stuck up; cockernonie (which see); cock-raw, manifestly or plainly raw, underdone; cock-up nose, a turned-up nose, "tip-tilted," as Lord Tennyson more elegantly describes it, and cock-eye, a squint-eye, that cocks up or awry when it should look straight.

None of these words have any connection with the male bird of the Gallinaceæ, but all are traceable etymologically to the Gaelic root of coc. Philologists, if so disposed, may trace to this same source the vulgar and indecent English and Scottish words which may be found in Juvenal and Horace as Mentula.

Cockernonie, a gathering up of the hair of women, after a fashion similar to that of the modern "chignon," and sometimes called a "cock-up." Mr. Kirkton, of Edinburgh, preaching against "cock-ups"—of which chignons were the representatives a quarter of a century ago—said: "I have been all this year preaching against the vanity of women, yet I see my own daughter in the kirk even now with as high a 'cock-up' as any one of you all."

Jamieson was of the opinion, that cockernonie signified a snood, or the gathering of the hair in a band or fillet, and derived the word from the Teutonic koker, a cape, and nonne, a nun, i.e., such a sheath for fixing the hair as nuns were accustomed to use! The word was a contemptuous one for false hair—a contrivance to make a little hair appear to be a good deal—and seems to have been compounded of the Gaelic coc, to stand erect, and neoni, nothing.

I saw my Meg come linkin' ower the lea,
I saw my Meg, but Meggie saw na me,
Her cockernonie snooded up fu' sleek.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

But I doubt the daughter's a silly thing :
an unco cockernony she had busked on her head at the kirk last Sunday.—SCOTT :
Old Mortality.

My gude name! If ony body touched my gude name I wad neither fash council nor commissary. I would be down upon them like a sea-falcon amang a wheen wild geese, and the best o' them that dared to say onything o' Meg Dods but what was honest and civil, I wad soon see if her cockernonie was made o' her ain hair or other folks'!—SCOTT : St. Ronan's Well.

Cod, from the Gaelic, cod, a cushion, a pillow, a bag, a receptacle; peas-cod, the shell in which the peas are formed and retained. The word is retained in English in an indelicate sense for the scrotum.

I hae guid fire for winter weather,
A cod o' caff (chaff) wud fill a cradle,
A halter an' a guid hay tether,
A deuk about the dub to paidle.

—The Woin' o' Jenny and Jack.

Cod-crune or cod-crooning, a curtain lecture; from the Gaelic cod, a pillow, and croon, to murmur, to lament, to moan. Jamieson derives the word from the Teutonic kreunen, and says it is sometimes called a "bowster (bolster)lecture." No such word, however, as kreunen or krunen is to be found in the German dictionaries.

Codroch, miserable, ugly, detestable. These are the meanings assigned to the word by Allan Ramsay, though Jamieson, who cites it as used in Fifeshire and the Lothians, explains it as a rustic, or one who is dirty and slovenly.

A codroch coffe, he is sure sich,
And lives like ony wareit wretch.

—Fadder Coffe: The Evergreen.

The final syllable seems to be the Gaelic droch, bad, evil, wicked, mischievous. Co is doubtless the Gaelic comh (pronounced co), a prefix equivalent to the Latin co and con. Jamieson derives it from the Irish Gaelic cudar, the rabble, a word that does not appear in O'Reilly's excellent Irish Dictionary, though cudarman and cudarmanta appear in it as synonymous with "vulgar and rustic."

Coffe, a fellow; in vulgar English, a chap. From the German kaufen, to buy; and kaufmann, a merchant, a tradesman.

Coft, bought, purchased. Cooft, to buy, from kaufen, has become obsolete; but cooper, a buyer or seller, survives in horse-cooper or horse-dealer.

Then he has coft for that ladye

A fine silk riding-gown;

Likewise he coft for that ladye

A steed, and set her on.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads:

Jock o' Hazelgreen (old version).

Cog and cogie, a bowl or cup, also a basin. From the Gaelic cuach, a cup, used either for broth, ale, or stronger drink.

I canna want my cogie, sir,

I canna want my cogie;

I winna want my three-girred cog

For a' the wives in Bogie.

—DUKE OF GORDON.

It's good to have our cog out when it rains kail!—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Coggle, to shake, to waggle; from the Gaelic gog or cog, to shake; gogail, wavering, unsteady. Whence probably the French coquette, a flirt, or one who wavers or is unsteady in the bestowal of her favours to male admirers.

It coggled thrice, but at the last

It rested on his shoulders fast.

—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha.

Collie-shangie, a loud dispute, a quarrel, an uproar, a noise of angry tongues.

How the collie-shangie works

Betwixt the Russians and the Turks.

—BURNS: To a Gentleman who Sent him a Newspaper.

"It has been supposed," says Jamieson, "that from collie, a shepherd's dog, and shangie, a chain, comes the word collie-shangie, a quarrel between two dogs fastened with the same chain." Under the word "collie," he explains it to mean a quarrel, as well as a dog of that species; as if he believed that the gentle and sagacious shepherd's dog was more quarrelsome than the rest of the canine species. In Gaelic, coileid means noise, confusion, uproar; and coileideach, noisy, confused, angry; which is no doubt the etymology of collie in the compound word collie-shangie. The meaning of shangie is difficult to trace, unless it be from the Gaelic seang (pronounced shang), slender, lean, hungry.

Conundrum, a kind of riddle suggestive of resemblances where no resemblances exist; a wordy puzzle. The word is of comparatively recent introduction into English, and has been supposed by some etymologists to be derivable from the German kennen, to know. Stormonth was content to trace it to the Anglo-Saxon cunnan; but on its being pointed out to him by the present writer, in a private note, after the issue of the first edition of his Dictionary, that the derivation was so far unsatisfactory that it did not account for the final syllable, and that it was an ancient Scottish word, of which the components were the Gaelic conn, sense or meaning, and antrom, heavy or difficult, he abandoned the Anglo-Saxon derivation, and expressed his resolve to adopt the Gaelic etymology if his Dictionary ever reached a second edition. He died, unfortunately, before preparing a second edition for the press.

Coof, cuif, gowk, a fool, a simpton, a cuckoo.

Ye see yon birkie ca'd a lord,
Wha struts an' stares an' a' that;
Though hundreds worship at his word,
He's but a cuif for a' that.

—BURNS: A Man's a Man.

Coof and gowk, though apparently unlike each other in sound, are probably corruptions of the same Gaelic words, cuabhag (cuafag) and cuach, a cuckoo:—

Ye breed of the gowk (cuckoo), ye hae but ae note in your voice, and ye're aye singing it.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

In England, a "fool" and a "goose" are synonymous; but in Scotland the cuckoo is the bird that symbolises stupidity.

Cuif, fool, and blockhead, are not exact synonyms,—rather a useless fellow, a sort of male tawpie. A man may be a cuif, and yet the reverse of a fool or blockhead.
—R. DRENNAN.

Coo-me-doo, a term of endearment for a turtle-dove, wood pigeon, or cushat.

O coo-me-doo, my love sac true,
If ye'll come down to me,
Ye'se hae a cage o' guid red gowd
Instead o' simple tree.

—BUCHAN'S Ballads: The Earl o' Mar's Daughter.

Corbie, the hooded-crow; also the raven; from the French corbeau.

Corbies will no pick out corbies' e'en (Old Proverb). [Signifying that two of a trade ought not to divulge the tricks of the trade; also applied among thieves to a confederate who informs against them, or peaches.]

The adder lies i' the corbie's nest,
Beneath the corbie's wing;
And the blast that rives the corbie's nest
Will soon bring hame the king.

—Jacobite Song, 1745.

Cosh, quiet, snug. (See COZIE.)

And sang fu' sweet the notes o' love,
Till a' was cosh within.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Gay Goshawk.

Cosie, cozie, comfortable, snug, warm.

While some are cosie in the neuk,
And forming assignations
To meet some day.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Jamieson says that cosie, snug, warm, comfortable, seems to be of the same derivation as cosh, a comfortable situation, and comfortable as implying a defence from the cold. It is evidently from the Gaelic coiseag, a little, snug, or warm corner, a derivation from cos and cois, a hollow, a recess, a corner.

Couthie, well-known, familiar, handsome, and agreeable—in contradistinction to the English word uncouth.

Some kindle, couthie, side by side,
And burn together trimly.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

My ain couthie dame,
O my ain couthie dame;
Wi' my bonny bits o' bairns,
And my ain couthie dame.

—Ingleside Lilts.

Cowp, to tumble over; akin to the French coup, a blow; whence to suffer a blow in falling.

I drew my scythe in sic a fury,
I near had *cowp*it in my hurry.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Crabb, to find fault, to be angry, to complain for slight cause, or without real necessity. This word is traceable in the English crabbed, ill-tempered.

He that *crabb*s without cause should mease (apologise) without mends (making amends).—Scottish Proverb.

Crack, talk, gossip, conversation, confidential discourse, a story; from the Gaelic crac, to talk; cracaire, a talker, a gossip, and cracaireachd, idle talk or chat. To "crack a thing up" in English is to talk it into repute by praise. A crack article is a thing highly praised. Jamieson derives the word from the German kraken, to make a noise, though there is no such word in that language.

But raise your arm, and tell your crack Before them a'.

—BURNS: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

They're a' in famous tune
For cracks that day.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

The cantie auld folk crackin' crouse,
The young anes rantin' through the house;
My heart has been sae fain to see them,
That I for joy hae barkit wi' them.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

A lady on hiring a servant girl in the country, told her, as a great indulgence, that she should have the liberty of attending the kirk every Sunday, but that she would be expected to return home immediately after the conclusion of the service. The lady, however, rather unexpectedly found a positive objection raised against this apparently reasonable arrangement. "Then I canna engage wi' ye, mem, for indeed I wadna gie the crack i' the kirkyard for a' the sermon."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Craig, the neck.

Ane got a twist o' the craig,
Ane got a punch o' the wame;

C

Symy Hair got lamed o' a leg,
And syne ran wabblin' hame.
—Border Minstrelsy: The Death of Featherstonehaugh.

Crambo-clink or crambo-jingle, a contemptuous name for doggerel verse, and bad or mediocre attempts at poetry, which Douglas Jerrold, with wit as well as wisdom—and they are closely allied—described as “verse and worse.”

A' ye wha live by crambo-clink,
A' ye wha write and never think,
Come mourn wi' me.
—BURNS: On a Scotch Bard.

Amaist as soon as I could spell,
I to the crambo-jingle fell,
Tho' rude and rough;
But crooning to a body's sel'
Does weel enough.
—BURNS: Epistle to Lapraik.

Crambo seems to be derived from the Gaelic crom, crooked, or perhaps from “cramp” or “cramped.” “Clink” and “jingle,” assonance, consonance, or rhyme, are from the English.

Creel or creil, a fish-basket; from the French ercille, with the same meaning.

The boatie rows, the boatie rows,
The boatie rows fu' weel,
And muckle luck attend the boat,
The merlin, and the creel.—Old Song.

Creepie, a low stool; from the Gaelic crub, to bend low.

I sit on my creepie and spin at my wheel,
An' think on the laddie that lo'es me sae weel.—Logie o' Buchan.

Creeshie, greasy.

Kamesters (wool-combers) are aye creeshie (Old Proverb), i.e., people are ever tainted with their trade, as in the phrase, “Millers are aye mealy.”

Crone, an old woman, a witch. Worcester, in his Dictionary, derives this word from the Scottish “croon” “the hollow muttering sound with which old witches uttered their incantations.” (See CROON.)

Crony, a comrade, a dear friend, a boon companion; derived in a favourable sense from crone. This Scottish word seems to have been introduced to English notice by James I. It was used by Swift and other writers of his period, and was admitted into Johnson's Dictionary, who described it as a “cant word.”

To oblige your crony Swift,
Bring our dame a New Year's gift.
—SWIFT.

My name is Fun, your crony dear,
The nearest friend ye ha'e.
—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

And at his elbow Souter Johnny,
His ancient, trusty, drouthy crony.
—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Croodle, to coo like a dove: “a wee croodlin' doo,” a term of endearment to an infant.

Far ben thy dark green plantin' shade
The cushat (wood-pigeon) croodles amorously.—TANNAHILL.

There's ae thing keeps my heart light,
Whate'er the world may do;
A bonnie, bonnie, bonnie, bonnie,
Wee croodlin' doo.—Old Song.

Croon, to hum over a tune, to prelude on an instrument. The word seems derivable from the Gaelic cronan, a dull, murmuring sound, a mournful and monotonous tune.

The sisters grey before the day
Did croon within their cloister.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Whiles holding fast his guid blue bonnet,
Whiles croonin o'er some auld Scots sonnet.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Where auld ruined castles grey
Nod to the moon,
To fright the nightly wanderer's way
Wi' eldritch croon.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Plaintive tunes,
Such as corpse-watching beldam croons.
—Studies from the Antique.

Crouse, merry, lively, brisk, bold,
from the Gaelic craos, greedy, sensual, gluttonous, eager for any pleasure of the senses.

A cock's aye crouse on his ain midden.—
ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The cantie auld folk crackin' crouse,
The young anes rantin' through the house.
—BURNS: The Twa Dogs.

Crowdie, oatmeal boiled to a thick consistency; crowdie-time, breakfast-time or meal-time.

Jamieson goes to the Icelandic for the origin of the word crowdie, once the favourite and general food of the Scottish people, in the days before the less nutritious potato was introduced into the country. But the name of crowdie is not so likely to be derived from the Icelandic graut-ur, gruel made of groats,
as from the Gaelic cruaidh, thick, firm, of hard consistency.
Gruel is thin, but porridge or crowdie is thick and firm, and in that quality its great merit consists, as distinguished from its watery competitor, the nourishment of the sick-room, and not to be compared to the strong wholesome "parritch," which Burns designated "the chief of Scotland's food."

Oh, that I had never been married,
I'd never had nae care;
Now I've gotten wife and bairns,
An' they cry crowdie evermair!
Once crowdie, twice crowdie,
Three times crowdie in a day!

—BURNS.

Then I gaed hame at crowdie-time,
And soon I made me ready.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

My sister Kate came up the gate
Wi' crowdie unto me, man;
She swore she saw the rebels run
Frae Perth unto Dundee, man.

—The Battle of Sheriffmuir.

Crowdie, properly, is oatmeal mixed with cold water; but it is also used for food in general, as in the expression,
"I'll be hame about crowdie-time."—R.
DRENNAN.

Crummie, a familiar name for a favourite cow; from the crooked horn. Gaelic crom, crooked. In the ancient ballad of "Tak' your auld cloak about ye," quoted by Shakespeare in "Othello," the word appears as Crumbock.

Bell, my wife, who loves no strife,
She said unto me quietly,
Rise up and save cow Crumbock's life,
And put thine auld cloak about thee.

The word appears as Crum-mock in Burns's "Epistle to Major Logan."

Hale be your heart, hale be your fiddle,
 Lang may your elbuck jouk and diddle,
 To cheer you through the weary widdle
 O' this wide warl',
 Until you on a crummock driddle,
 A grey-hair'd carl.

Crunt, a smart blow with a cudgel or fist on the crown of the head.

And mony a fellow got his licks
 Wi' hearty crunt.

—BURNS: To Willie Simpson.

This word seems to come either from the English crown, the head (hence a blow on the head), or from the Gaelic crun, which has the same meaning.
 The crown of the head, the very top of the head, is a common phrase; the croon of the causeway—the top ridge of the road, or the middle of the road—is a well-known Scotticism. In slang English, a crunt is called a nopper, or one for his "nob."

Cuddie, a donkey; supposed by some to be derived from the Gaelic cutach, bob-tailed, or from ceutach, grace, elegance, beauty, applied to the animal by its owner either in affection or derision.

One day my grandfather saw Andrew Leslie's donkey up to the knees in a field of clover. "Hallo, Andrew!" said he, "I thought your cuddie wad eat nothing but thistles and nettles." "Ay," said he,
 "but he misbehaved himself, and I put him in there just to punish him."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Cuddle. This word, which in the English vernacular means to embrace, to fondle, to press to the bosom, simply signifies in Scottish parlance to sleep, and is derived from the Gaelic cadail, sleep.

An auld beddin' o' claes

Was left me by my mither;
 They're jet black o'er wi' flaes;
 Ye may cuddle in them thegither.

The bride she gaed to her bed,
 The bridegroom he came till her,
 The fiddler crept in at the foot,
 An' they a' cuddled together.

—Maggie's Tocher: *The Tea-
 Table Miscellany*.

Where shall I cuddle the night?

—GALT: Mansie Wauch.

Cuif or coof, a fool, a blockhead.
 (See COOF, ante.)

Cupar.

He that will to Cupar, maun to Cupar.

This proverb, applied to an obstinate man who will have his own way, has puzzled many commentators. Dean Ramsay asks, "Why Cupar? and whether is it the Cupar of Angus or the Cupar of Fife?"

It has been suggested that the origin of "Cupar," in the sense employed in the proverb, is the Gaelic comhar (covar), a mark, a sign, a proof, and that the phrase is equivalent to "he who will be a marked man (by his folly or per-versity) must be a marked man."
 It has also been suggested that "Cupar" is from comharra (covarra), shelter or protection of the sanctuary, to which a man resorted when hard pressed by justice for a crime which he had committed.

Curn, a grain of corn; whence kernel, the fruit in the nut; curny-gutty.

Mind to splice high with Latin—a curn or two of Greek would not be amiss; and if ye can bring in anything about the judgment of Solomon in the original Hebrew, and season with a merry jest or so, the dish will be the more palatable.—SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel.

Allied words to curn are "kern" and "churn," a hand-mill for grinding corn, and "churn," a mill for stirring the milk so as to make butter.

Cushat, a turtle-dove, a wood-pigeon.

O'er lofty aiks the cushats wail,
And echo coos the dolefu' tale.

—BURNS: Bess and her Spinning Wheel.

Custock or castock, the edible stalk of cabbage; a kail-runt.

There's cauld kail in Aberdeen,
An' custocks in Strabogie,
An' ilka lad maun hae his lass,
An' I maun hae my cogie.

—HERD'S Collection: The Three Girred Cog.

Cutty or cuttie, short; from the Gaelic cutach, that has been cut, abridged, or shortened; whence cutty-pipe, a short pipe.

I'm no sae scant o' clean pipes as to blaw wi' a burnt cutty.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Till first ae caper, then anither,
Tam tint his reason a' thegither,
And roared out "Weel done, cutty sark!"
And in an instant a' was dark.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Her cutty sark, o' Paisley harn,
That when a lassie she had worn,

In longitude though sorely scanty,
It was her best, and she was vauntty.

—Ibid.

Cuttie-stool, a three-legged stool; a short stool, such as Jennie Geddes is reported to have thrown from the pulpit stairs at the head of the heretical minister.

A circumstance connected with Scottish church discipline has undergone a great change in my time—I mean the public censure from the pulpit of persons convicted of a breach of the seventh commandment. . . . This was performed by the guilty person standing up before the whole congregation on a raised platform called the cutty-stool.—DEAN RAMSAY.

The culprits did not always take the admonition patiently. It is recorded of one of them in Ayrshire, that when accused of adultery by the minister, he interrupted and corrected his reverend monitor by denying the imputation, and calling out, "Na! na! minister; it was simple fornie (fornication), and no adultery ava."—Ibid.

Cutty-mun and tree-ladle. These words, according to Jamieson, were the names of old tunes once popular in Scotland. No trace of them, however, has hitherto been discovered, and the interpretation given to them by Jamieson remains a mere supposition on his part. Cutty-mun, he says, means a spoon with a short handle. Cutty no doubt signifies short or small, as in cutty-stool and in cutty-pipe; but Jamieson should have been aware that in no known language does mun signify a spoon. Investigation would have shown him that the same language from which cutty is derived supplied the true etymology of mun, from mainne, delay, and that cutty-mun signified short delay. In like manner tree-ladle has no reference to a wooden spoon or ladle, as he supposed, but is derived from the Gaelic triall, departure on a journey, and luathaich, speed; luathailteach, swift, speedy. Thus the old tune mentioned by Jamieson resolves itself into a Lowland rendering of the Gaelic, and signified "a short shift and speedy exit." This would be an appropriate phrase applied to the hanging of a Highland criminal by a feudal chief, or to the more formal but equally efficacious justice as administered in the Lowlands, and is, there can be little or no doubt, the real meaning of the name of the old song on which Jamieson relied for his interpretation.

Daff, to make merry, to be sportive; daffin', merriment.

Wi' daffin' weary grown,
Upon a knowe they sat them down.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Dr. Adam, Rector of the High School of Edinburgh, rendered the Horatian expression "desipere in loco" by the Scottish phrase "weel-timed daffin'"—a translation which no one but a Scot could properly appreciate.—DEAN RAMSAY.

Daff has long ceased to be current English, though it was used by Shakespeare in the sense of to befool. In the scene between Leonato and Claudio in "Much Ado About Nothing," when Claudio refuses to fight with an old man, Leonato replies:

Canst thou so daff me—thou who killed my child?

The Shakespearean commentators all agree that this word should be doff me, or put me off.

They interpret in the same way the line in King Lear:—

The madcap Prince of Wales, that daff'd the world aside!

It would appear, however, that in both instances, daff was used in the sense which it retains in Scotch, that of fool or befool.

Daft, crazy, wild, mad.

Or maybe in a frolic daft
To Hague or Calais take a waft.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Daidle, to trifle, to dawdle.

Daidlin' in the mock-turtle! I hate a' things mock.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Daiker or daker, to saunter, to stroll lazily or idly, or without defined purpose or object.

Dambrod, draught-board or chess-board; from the Flemish dambord; the first syllable from the French dame, or jeu aux dames, draughts.

Mrs. Chisholm entered the shop of a linen-draper, and asked to be shown some table-cloths of a dambrod pattern. The shopman was taken aback at such apparently strong language as "damned broad," used by a respectable lady. The lady, on her part, was surprised at the stupidity of the London shopman, who did not understand so common a phrase.—DEAN RAMSAY.

Dapperpye, brilliant with many colours; from dapper, neat and smart, the German tapfer, brave, English, bravery in attire, and pie, variegated.

Oh, he has pu'd off his dapperpye coat,
The silver buttons glanced bonny.

—Border Minstrelsy: Annan Water.

Darg or daurk, a job of work; from the Gaelic dearg, a plough.

You will spoil the darg if you stop the plough to kill a mouse.—Northumbrian Proverb.

He never did a good darg that gaed grumbling about it.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Monie a sair daurk we hae wrought.

—BURNS: To his Auld Mare Maggie.

Darger, a day-labourer, one who works by the piece or job; also a ploughman.

The croonin kye the byre drew nigh,
The darger left his thrift.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Water Kelpie.

Daud, to pelt; also a large piece.

I'm busy too, an' skelpin' at it,
But bitter daudin' showers ha'e wat it.

—BURNS: To J. Lapraik.

He'll clap a shangan on her tail,
An' set the bairns to daud her
Wi' dirt this day.

—BURNS: The Ordination.

A daud o' bannock
Wad mak' him blithe as a body could.
—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Daud and blaud or blad are synonymous in the sense of a large piece of anything, and also of pelting or driving, as applied to rain or wind.

I got a great blad o' Virgil by heart.
—JAMIESON.

Dauner or daunder, to saunter, to stroll leisurely, without a purpose.

Some idle and mischievous youths waited for the minister on a dark night, and one of them, dressed as a ghost, came up to him in hopes of putting him in a fright. The minister's cool reply upset the plan. "Weel, Maister Ghaist, is this a general rising, or are ye jist taking a danner frae your grave by yoursel'?" —DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

Daunton, to subdue, to tame, to daunt, to dominate, to break in (applied to horses); from the Gaelic dan, bold, daring, and danaich, to exert boldness, to dare, to challenge, to defy.

To daunton me, and me sae young,
Wi' his fause heart an' flatterin' tongue,
That is the thing ye ne'er shall see,
For an auld man shall never daunton me.

—Old Song, altered by BURNS.

Daut, to fondle, to caress.

Dautie, a darling, one who is fondled and affectionately treated; allied to the English doat, doat upon, and dotage.

Whae'er shall say I wanted Jean,
When I did kiss and daut her.
—BURNS: Had I the wyle.

My dautie and my doo (dove).
—ALLAN RAMSAY.

To some it may appear that dawtie may have had its origin from the Gaelic dalt, a foster-child.—JAMIESON.

Yestreen ye were your daddie's doo,
But an your mither's dautie.
—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: The Trooper and Fair Maid.

Daw, a slut, akin to the colloquial English dowdy, an ill-dressed woman or sloven.

See-saw, Margery Daw,
Sold her bed and lay in the straw.
—Nursery Rhyme.

Dawds and blawds is a phrase that denotes the greatest abundance.—JAMIESON.

Dawk, a drizzling rain; dawky, moist, rainy, not exactly a down-pour of steady rain, but of intermittent drizzle.

Day-daw, abbreviation of day-dawn, or dawn of day.

Dead is often used in the sense of very, extremely, or entirely, as in the English word dead-beat. It occurs in Scottish parlance as dead-loun, very calm and still; dead-could, extremely cold; dead-ripe, very ripe, or ripe to rottenness; dead-sueir, extremely lazy or tired out.

Dear me! Oh dear me! Deary me! These colloquial exclamations are peculiar to the English and Scottish languages, and are indicative either of surprise, pain, or pity. If the word "dear" be accepted as correct, and not a corruption of some other word with a different meaning, the explanation, if literally translated into any other language, would be nonsensical; in French, for instance, it would be O cher moi! and in German, Ach theuer mich! The original word, as used by our British ancestors, and misunderstood by the Danes, Flemings, and Dutch, who succeeded them in part possession of the country, appears to have been the Gaelic Dia (dee-a), God. Oh Dia! or Oh dear! and Oh dear me! would signify, God! Oh God! or Oh my God! synonymous with the French Mon Dieu! or Oh mon Dieu! and the German Mein Gott! or Ach mein Gott!

Deas, a stone seat in the porch, or at the porch of a church, probably so named from its usual position at the right hand side; from the Gaelic deas, the right side, on the right hand.

An' when she came to Marie's kirk,
An' sat down in the deas,
The licht that came frae fair Annie Enlichten't a' the place.
PERCY'S Reliques: Sweet William and Fair Annie.

The etymology of the English and French word dais has given rise to much difference of opinion. Stormonth's English Dictionary defines dais as "a canopy over a throne, afterwards the whole seat," and suggests a derivation from the "old French dais, a table, from Latin discus, a quoit—the raised floor at the upper end of a dining-room; a raised seat, often canopied." Brachet's Etymological Dictionary, in which the compiler follows Littré, says that "dais in old French always meant a dinner-table, but especially a state table with a canopy; that gradually the sense of table has been lost, and that of canopy prevails; whereas in England the sense of canopy is lost, while that of the platform on which the table stands has taken its place."

May not all these apparent discrepancies between canopy, platform, table, seat, and disk or discus, be explained by the Gaelic deas, as the real origin of dais? The right-hand side of the host was the place of honour, reserved for the most distinguished guest; and the canopy was raised, as a matter of course, at the upper end of the banquetting hall, where kings and great nobles held their festivals. The suggestion will be taken by philologists quantum valeat. It is certainly as well deserving of consideration as the derivation from discus is, which has hitherto found favour with philologists who are ignorant of the Gaelic.

Deave, to deafen.

Last May a braw wooer came down the lang glen,
An' sair wi' his love he did deave me;

I said there was naethin' I hated like men,
The deil gae wi'm to believe me.

—BURNS.

A drunken wife I hae at hame,
Her noisome din aye deaves me;
The ale-wife, the ale-wife,
The ale-wife she grieves me;
The ale-wife an' her barrelie
They ruin me an' deave me.

—BUCHAN'S Scots Songs and Ballads.

Deil's-buckie or Deevil's-buckie, an angry epithet applied to any mischievous lad or small boy. Jamieson says buckie signifies a spiral shell of any kind, and adds that a refractory urchin is not only designated by irate persons as a deil's buckie, but as a thrauen or twisted buckie. It may be questioned, however, whether buckie is not derived from the Gaelic buachaille, a cowherd, and not from a shell, as far more likely to be in use among a pastoral and agricultural peasantry than a shell, that is not in any way suggestive of either a good boy or a bad one.

Deray, disorder, disarray. The word is also applied to any amusement of a boisterous character.

Sic dancin' and deray.

—Christ's Kirk on the Green.

The word is used by the old poets Barbour and Douglas, but seldom or never by those of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and is all but obsolete.

Dern, dismal, gloomy.

Auld Dourie never saw a blink,
The lodging was so dark and dern.
—Border Minstrelsy: Chiratie's Will.

Deuch, a drink, a draught; a corruption of the Gaelic deoch, which has the same meaning. Jamieson has deuch-an-dorach and deuch-an-doris, both corruptions of the Gaelic deoch-an-dorus, a drink at the door, the parting cup, the stirrup-cup. The ale-house sign, once common in England as well as in Scotland, "The Dog and Duck," appears to have had no relation to aquatic sports, but to have been a corruption of the Gaelic deoch an diugh, a drink to-day. In the same manner, "Mad Dog"—once set up as a sign at a place called Odell, as recorded in Hotten's "History of Sign-boards"—is merely the Gaelic of math deoch or maith deoch, good drink. In the London slang of the present day, duke is a word used among footmen and grooms for gin.

Deuk. A vulgar old song, which Burns altered and sent to "Johnson's Museum," without much improvement on the coarse original, commences with the lines:—

The bairns gat out wi' an unco shout,
The deuk's dang o'er my daddie, oh!
The fient may care, quo' the ferlie auld wife,
He was but a paidlin' body, oh!

The glossaries that accompany the editions of Burns issued by Allan Cunningham, Alexander Smith, and others, all agree in stating that deuk signifies the aquatic fowl the duck. But "the duck has come over, or beaten over, or flown over my father," does not make sense of the passage, or convey any meaning whatever. It is probable—though no editor of Burns has hitherto hinted it—that the word deuk should be deuch, from the Gaelic deoch, drink, a deep potation, which appears in Jamieson without other allusion to its Gaelic origin than the well-known phrase the deoch-an-dorus, the stirrup-cup or drink at the door. (See DEUCH, ante.) Seen in this light, the line "the deuch's dang o'er my daddie" would signify "the drink or drunkenness has beaten or come over my daddie," and there can be little doubt that this is the true reading.

Dew-piece, a slight refreshment, a piece of bread, a scone, or oat-cake, given out to farm-servants in the early morning before proceeding to out-of-door work.

Dight, to wipe, or wipe off.

Dight your mou' ere I kiss you.
—Old Song.

Just as I dight frae the table the wine drops in ma sleeve.—Noctes Ambrosiana.

Dilly castle. This, according to Jamieson, is a name given by boys to a mound of sand which they erect on the-sea shore, and stand upon until the advancing tide surrounds it and washes it away. He thinks the name comes from the Teutonic "digle or digel, secretus, or from the Swedish doelja or dylga, occultare suus, a hiding-place." The etymology was not so far to seek or so difficult to find as Dr. Jamieson supposed, but is of purely home origin in the Gaelic dile (in two syllables), a flood, an inundation, an overflow of water.

Ding, to beat, or beat out; from the Gaelic dinn, to trample, to tread down.

If ye've the deil in ye, ding him out wi' his brither. Ae deil dings anither.

It's a sair dung (beaten) bairn that manna greet.—ALLAN RAMSAY, Scots Proverbs.

Ding only survives in English in the phrase ding, dong, bell; and is the slang of working people out on the strike for an advance of wages, who call a comrade who has left the confederacy, and yielded to the terms of the employer, a dung, i.e., one who is beaten in the conflict.

The following ludicrous example of the use of dung as the past tense of ding, to beat, is given by Dean Ramsay in an anecdote of two bethrels or beadles, who were severally boasting of the fervour of their two ministers in preaching:—

"I think," said one, "our minister did weel. Ay! he gart the stour fly out o' the cushion." To which the other replied with a calm feeling of superiority, "Stour out o' the cushion! Hoot! our minister, sin' he cam' till us, has dung the guts out o' twa Bibles!"

Dink, from the Gaelic diong, worthy, highly esteemed, proud, is suggested by Jamieson to mean neat, prim, saucy. The word occurs in the song, "My lady's gown there's gairs upon't," in which a lover draws a contrast between the great lady of his neighbourhood and the humble lass that he is in love with, to the disadvantage of the former. To "dink up" is to dress gorgeously or ostentatiously. Gair, in the title of the song, signifies an ornamental fold in the dress.

My lady's dink, my lady's dressed,
The flower and fancy o' the West;
But the lassie that a man lo'es best,
That's the lass to make him blest.

Dinsome, noisy, full of din.

Till block an' studdie (stithy or anvil) ring and reel

Wi' dinsome clamour. *

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Dirdum, noise, uproar; supposed to be a corruption of the Gaelic torman, noise, uproar, confusion.

Humph! it's juist because—juist that the dirdum's a' about yon man's pock-manty.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Sic a dirdum about naething.

—LAIRD OF LOGAN.

What wi' the dirdum and confusion, and the lowpin here and there of the skeigh brute of a horse.—SCOTT: Foxtunes of Nigel.

Dirl, a quivering blow on a hard substance.

I threw a noble throw at ane,
It jist played dirl upon the bane,
But did nae mair.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Divot, a piece of turf ready cut and dried for burning.

The deil sat girnin' in the neuk,
Rivin' sticks to roast the Duke,
And aye they kept it hot below,
Bonnie laddie! Highland laddie!
Wi' peats and divots frae Glencoe,
Bonnie laddie! Highland laddie!

—Jacobite Ballad.

Doited, confused, bewildered, stupid; hopelessly perplexed; of a darkened or hazy intellect.

Thou clears the head o' doited lear,
Thou cheers the heart o' droopin' care,
Thou even brightens dark despair
Wi' gloomy smile.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Ye auld, blind, doited bodie,
And blinder may ye be—
'Tis but a bonnie milking cow
My minnie gied to me.

—Our Gudeman cam' Hame at Een.

This word seems to be derivable from the Gaelic doite, dark-coloured, obscure.

Doited evidently has some connection with the modern English word dotage, which again comes from dote, which anciently had, in addition to its modern meaning, that of to grow dull, senseless, or stupid.—R. DRENNAN.

Do-nae-guid and Ne'er-do-weel.

These words are synonymous, and signify what the French call a vaurien, one who is good for nothing. Ne'er-do-weel has lately become much more common in English than "never-do-well."

Donnart, stupefied.

"Has he learning?" "Just dung donnart wi' learnin'."

—SCOTT: St. Ronan's Well.

Jamieson traces this word to the German donner, thunder; but it comes most likely from the Gaelic donas, ill-fortune, or donadh, mischief, hurt, evil—corrupted by the Lowland Scotch by the insertion of the letter r. The English word dunce appears to be from the same source, and signifies an unhappy person, who is too stupid to learn.

Donnot or donot, a ne'er-do-weel, usually applied to an idle or worthless girl or woman; a corruption of do-nought, or do-nothing.

Janet, thou donot,
I'll lay my best bonnet

Thou gets a new gudeman afore it be night.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

Donsie, unlucky; from the Gaelic donas, misfortune; the reverse of sonas, sonsie or lucky.

Their donsie tricks, their black mistakes,
Their failings and mischances.

—BURNS: Address to the Unco Guid.

Jamieson admits that the word may be derived from the Gaelic donas, and says that it means not only unlucky, but pettish, peevish, ill-natured, dull, dreary. But all these epithets resolve themselves more or less intimately into the idea of unluckiness.

Doo, a dove, a pigeon; doo-tart or tert, a pigeon-pie. "My bonnie doo" is a familiar and tender salutation to a lover. Doo-cot, a dove-cot.

Oh, lay me doun, my doo, my doo,
Oh, lay me doun, my ain kind dearie;
For dinna ye mind upo' the time
We met in the wood at the well sae wearie.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

Dook or douk, to dive under water. Colloquial English, to duck or dive.

Gae douk, gae douk, the king he cried,
Gae douk for gold and fee,
Oh, wha will douk for Hunter's sake.
—HERD'S Collection; Young Hunter.

Dool or dule, pain, grief, dolefulness; from the Gaelic dolas, the French deuil, mourning.

Of a' the numerous human dools,
Thou bear'st the gree.
—BURNS: Address to the Toothache.

Though dark and swift the waters pour,
Yet here I wait in dool and sorrow;
For bitter fate must I endure,
Unless I pass the stream ere morrow.
—Legends of the Isles.

Oh, dule on the order
Sent our lads to the Border—
The English for once by guile won the day.
—The Flowers of the Forest.

Dorty, haughty, stubborn, austere, supercilious; from dour, hard (q.v.)

Let dorty dames say na!
As lang as e'er they please,
Seem cauldier than the snaw
While inwardly they bleeze.
—ALLAN RAMSAY: Potwarth on the Green.

Then though a minister grow dorty,
Ye'll snap your fingers
Before his face.
—BURNS: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

Douce, of a gentle or courteous disposition; from the French doux, sweet.

Ye dainty deacons and ye douce conveners.
—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Ye Irish lords, ye knights and squires,
Who represent our brughs and shires,
An' doucely manage our affairs
In Parliament.
—BURNS: The Author's Earnest Cry and Prayer.

Doun - draught. A pull-down, draw-down, or drag-down.

Twa men upon ae dog's a sair doun-draught.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Dour, hard, bitter, disagreeable, close-fisted, severe, stern; from the French and Latin, dur and durus.

When biting Boreas, fell and dour,
Sharp shivers through the leafless bower.
—BURNS: A Winter Night.

I've been harsh-tempered and dour enough, I know; and it's only fitting as they should be hard and dour to me where I'm going.—A. TROLLOPE: Vicar of Bullhampton.

Dous or Doos, i.e., doves. To "shoot amang the dous" is a metaphorical phrase for making an assertion at random or without knowledge. It is sometimes applied to any wilfully false assertion. The true meaning is merely that of an indiscriminate shot, in the hope of hitting or killing something — as in the barbarous practice, miscalled sport, which was the fashion under royal patronage at Hurlingham, of firing into a cloud of pigeons with the chance or the certainty of killing some of them.

Dow, to be able, of which the synonym in the infinitive mood to can, from the Teutonic kannen, has long been obsolete. The misuse and perversion of this word in English in the customary greeting "How do you do?" is a remarkable instance of the corruption of the popular speech by the illiterate multitude, and its adoption after long currency by the literate, until it acquires an apparent authenticity and a real vitality which no correction however authoritative can rectify. "How do you do?" originally meant, and still means, how do you dow? i.e., how is your strength or ability? how do you thrive or prosper or get on? as in the German phrase Wie geht's? or Wie befinden sie sich? the Italian Come state? or Come sta? in the French Comment vous portez vous? or Comment vous va-t-il? or the Gaelic Cia mar tha sibh an diugh, pronounced ca-mar-a shee an dew, equivalent to the English How are you? The ancient word doughty, strong, is a derivative of dow, able. Dow is provincial in England, but common in Lowland Scotch.

Facts are chiefs that winna ding,
And downa be disputed.—BURNS.

And now he goes daundrin' about the dykes,
An' a' he dow do is to hand the tykes.
—LADY GRIZZEL BAILLIE.

Dowd, stale, flat; from the Gaelic daoidh, weak, feeble, worthless.

Cast na out the dowd water till ye get the fresh.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Dowf, doof, doofing, doofart. All these words are applied to a stupid, inactive, dull person, and appear to be the originals of the modern English slang a duffer, which has a similar meaning.

Her dowf excuses pat me mad.
—BURNS: Epistle to Lapraik.

They're dowf and dowie at the best,
Dowf and dowie, dowf and dowie,
Wi' a' their variorum;
They canna please a Highland taste
Compared wi' Tullochgorum.
—REV. JOHN SKINNER.

Dowie, gloomy, melancholy, forlorn, low-spirited; from the Gaelic duibhe, blackness.

It's no the loss o' warl's gear
That could sae bitter draw the tear,
Or mak' our bardie, dowie, wear
The mourning weed.
—BURNS: Poor Mailie's Elegy.

Come listen, cronies, ane and a',
While on my dowie reed I blaw,
And mourn the sad untimely fa'
O' our auld town.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Down. The Scottish language contains many more compounds of down than the English, such as down-drag and down-draw, that which drags or draws a man down in his fortunes, an incumbrance; down-throw, of which the English synonym is overthrow; down-way, a declivity or downward path; down-put or down-putting, a rebuff; down-coming, abandonment of the sick-room on convalescence; down-look, a dejected look or expression of countenance; all of which are really English, although not admitted into the dictionaries.

Downa-do, impotency, powerlessness, inability.

I've seen the day ye buttered my brose,
And cuddled me late and early, O!
But downa-do's come o'er me now,
And oh I feel it sairly, O!

—BURNS: The Deuk's Dang o'er my Daddie.

Dowp, the posterior, sometimes written dolp. This word applies not only to the human frame, but to the bottom or end of anything, and is used in such phrases as the "dowp of a candle," "the dowp of an egg," as well as in the threats of an angry mother to a young child, "I'll skelp your dowp." "Where's your grannie, my wee man?" was a question asked of a child. The child replied, "Oh, she's ben the house, burning her dowp," i.e., her candle-end.

Deil a wig has a provost o' Fairport worn sin auld Provost Jervie's time, and he had a quean o' a servant lass that dressed it hersel' wi' the dowp o' a candle and a dredging-box.—SCOTT: The Antiquary.

Dowp-skelper. A humorous word applied to a schoolmaster; from skelp, to smite with the palm of the hand. A similar idea enters into the composition of the English phrase "a bum-brusher," with the difference that brusher refers to the rod, and not to the palm of the hand. Burns applies the epithet to the Emperor Joseph of Austria, with what allusion it is now difficult to trace:—

To ken what French mischief was brewin'
Or what the drumlie Dutch were doin'—
That vile dowp-skelper Emperor Joseph,
If Venus yet had got his nose off.

—BURNS: To a Gentleman who had Promised to send him a Newspaper.

This word is not to be mistaken for dub-skelper—from dub, a pool, a pond, a puddle—and applied to one who rushes on his way recklessly, through thick and thin, heedless of dirt or obstruction.

Draibles or drabbles, drops of liquor or crumbs of food allowed to fall from the hand upon the clothes in the act of drinking or eating; akin to the English driblets, signifying small quantities of anything.

Draidgie. A funeral entertainment; from the French dragée, a comfit, a sweetmeat. This word does not appear in Jamieson, but is to be found in a small and excellent handbook of the Scottish vernacular, published in Edinburgh, 1818.

Dram. This ancient Scottish word for a small glass or "nip" of whisky or any other alcoholic liquor has long been adopted into English, but has no synonym of any allied sound in any other European language. The French call it a "petit verre," and the Germans a "schnapps," while the Americans have recently taken to calling it a "smile," or "an eye-opener." Philologists have been contented to derive it from the Greek drachma, though, if this be the fact, it is curious that the word has not found its way into the vernacular of any other people than those of the British Isles. But though the classic etymology be too firmly rooted in popular estimation to be readily abandoned, it may be interesting to note that in Lowland Scotch dram originally signified melancholy, heaviness of mind, from the Gaelic truime, heaviness, and that the dram was resorted to in order to raise the spirits and drive out melancholy—an idea which seems to have suggested the current American slang of a "smile."

"A story is told in Scotland of an old farmer too much addicted to his "dram" and his toddy, who was strictly forbidden by his medical attendant to indulge in more than an ounce of whisky per diem, if he hoped to escape a serious illness. The old man was puzzled at the word "ounce," and asked his son, who had studied at the University of St. Andrews and was qualifying for the Scottish ministry, what the doctor meant by an ounce. "An ounce," said his son, "why, every one knows that an ounce is sixteen drams (drachms)." "Ah! weel," said his sire, "if I may tak' sixteen drams i' the day, it's a' richt, an' I'll dae weel eneuch. The doctor, nae doot, kens his business. I've already had twa the day, and I've still fourteen to the fore!" Tradition does not record the ultimate fate of the old farmer.

Dreder, terror, apprehension, dread of impending evil; sometimes written dredour.

What aileth you, my daughter Janet,

You look so pale and wan?

There is a dreder in your heart,

Or else you love a man.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: Lord Thomas and the King's Daughter.

Dree, to endure, to suffer; probably from the Teutonic trüben, to trouble, to sadden, and thence to endure trouble or suffering; or from tragen, to bear, to carry, to draw.

Sae that no danger do thee deir

What dule in dern thou dree

(What soon thou mayst suffer in secret).

—ROBYN AND MAKYN: The Evergreen.

Oh wae, wae by his wanton sides,

Sae brawlie he could flatter,

Till for his sake I'm slighted sair,

And dree the kintra clatter.

—BURNS: Here's his Health in Water.

In the dialects of the North of England, to dree is used in the sense of to draw or journey towards a place.

In the summer-time, when leaves grow green,

And birds sing on the tree,

Robin Hood went to Nottingham

As fast as he could dree.

—ROBIN HOOD and the Jolly Tinker.

Dreigh, difficult, hard to travel, tedious, prolix, dry.

Hech, sirs! but the sermon was sair dreigh!

—GALT.

Dreich at the thought and dour at the delivery.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Driddle. This is a word of several meanings, all more or less significant of anything done by small quantities at a time, such as to urinate often, to move with slow steps, to spill a liquid by unsteady handling of the vessel which contains it. It appears to be traceable to the Gaelic drudh or druidh, to ooze, to drip, to penetrate, and drudhag, a small drop.

Droddum, a jocular name for the breech, the posteriors, but more popularly known as the hurdies or dowp (which see).

My sooth ! right bauld ye set your nose out,
As plump and grey as ony grozet ;
Oh, for some rank mercurial rozet,
Or fell red smeddum,
I'd gie ye sic a hearty dose o't,
Wad dress your droddum.

—BURNS : To a Louse, on seeing one on a Lady's Bonnet at Church.

The word seems to be of kin to drod, thick, squat, fleshy. The derivation is uncertain.

Droich, a dwarf; from the Gaelic troid or troich, with the same meaning.

Only look at the pictures (of the aristocracy) in their auld castles. What beautiful and brave faces ! Though now and then, to be sure, a dowdy or a droich.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Drook, to wet; drookit, wet through, thoroughly saturated with moisture; from the Gaelic druchd, dew, moisture, a tear, a drop; drudhag (dru-ag), a drop of water; and drughadh, penetrating, oozing through. The resemblance to the Greek δακρυ, a tear, is noteworthy.

There were twa doos sat in a dookit,
The rain cam' down and they were drookit.
—Nursery Song.

The last Hallowe'en I was waukin'
My drookit sark sleeve, as ye ken,
His likeness cam ben the house stalkin',
And the vera grey breeks o' Tam Glen.
—BURNS : Tam Glen.

My friends, you come to the kirk every Sabbath, and I lave you a' ower wi' the Gospel till ye're fairly drookit wi't.—Extract from a sermon by a minister in Arran : ROGERS'S Illustrations of Scottish Life.

Drouth, thirst; drouthie, thirsty; from dry, dryeth.

Tell him o' mine and Scotland's drouth.
—BURNS : Cry and Prayer.

Folks talk o' my drink, but never talk o' my drouth.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

When drouthie neebors neebors meet.
—BURNS : Tam o' Shanter.

Drumlie, turbid or muddy (applied to water), confused, not clear; applied metaphorically to thoughts or expression. This word would be a great acquisition to the English language if it could be adopted, and lends a peculiar charm to many choice passages of Scottish poetry. All its English synonyms are greatly inferior to it, both in logical and poetical expression. It is derived from the Gaelic trom or truim, heavy (and applied to water), turbid. The word appears at one time to have been good English.

Draw me some water out of this spring.
Madam, it is all foul, drumly, black, muddy !—French and English Grammar, 1623.

Haste, boatman, haste ! put off your boat,
Put off your boat for golden monie ;
I'll cross the drumlie stream to-night,
Or never mair I'll see my Annie.
—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border,

When blue diseases fill the drumlie air.
—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Drink drumfy German water
To make himself look fair and fatter.
—BURNS : The Two Dogs.

They had na sailed a league, a league,
A league but barely three,
When dismal grew his countenance,
And drumlie grew his c'e.
—LAIDLAW : The Demon Lover.

There's good fishing in drumlie waters.
ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

I heard once a lady in Edinburgh objecting to a preacher that she did not understand him. Another lady, his great admirer, insinuated that probably he was too deep for her to follow. But her ready answer was, "Na, na t—he's no just deep, ut he's drumfy."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Drummock, cold porridge.—*Noctes
Ambrosianæ*.

Drunt, draunt, to drawl, to whine,
to grumble; a fit of ill-humour, pettishness. Both of these words are from the Gaelic drannan, grumbling, growling, mourning, complaining; drannanach, peevish, morose, though erroneously derived by Jamieson from the Flemish drinten, tumescere.

May nae doot took the drunt,
To be compared to Willie.
—BURNS : Hallow'e'en.

Nae weel-tocher'd aunts to wait on their drunts,
And wish them in hell for it a', man.
—BURNS : The Tarbolton Lasses.

But lest he think I am uncivil,
To plague you with this draunting drivel.
—BURNS.

Dub, a small pool of dirty water.
The Goose-dubs is the name of a street in Glasgow. Deuk-dub, a duck-pond.

O'er dub and dyke
She'll run the fields all through.
—Leader Haughs and Yarrow.

There lay a deuk-dub afore the door,
And there fell he, I trow.
—HERD'S Collection : *The Brisk
Young Lad*.

Dud, a rag; duddies, little rags.

Then he took out his little knife,
Let a' his duddies fa',
An' he was the bravest gentleman
That stood among them a'.
—We'll Gang nae Mair a Rovin'.
A smytie o' wee duddie weans.
—BURNS.

The duddie wee laddie may grow a braw
man.—DAVID HUTCHESON.

Dunnie-wassal, a Highland gentleman.

There are wild dunnie-wassals three thousand times three
Will cry oich for the bonnets o' Bonnie Dundee.—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

This word, generally mis-printed in the Lowlands, and by Sir Walter Scott in his excellent ballad of "Bonnie Dundee," is from the Gaelic duine, a man, and uasal, gentle, noble, of good birth.

Dunsh, to sit down hastily and heavily.

His dowp dunshin' down.—Noctes Am-brosianæ.

Dunt, a blow, a knock; from dint, to deal a heavy blow that leaves a mark on a hard substance.

I am naebod's lord,
I am slave to naebod;
I hae a gude broad sword,
I'll tak' dunts frae naebod.
—BURNS: Naebod.

Dush or dish, to push with the head or horns like animals, to butt, to ram; also to give a hard blow, to destroy or discomfit.

Ye needna doubt I held my whisht,
The infant aith, half-formed, was crusht;
I glower'd as erie's I'd been dusht
In some wild glen;
Then sweet, like modest worth, she blusht,
And steppit ben.
—BURNS: The Vision.

The English slang dish, to defeat or conquer, seems to be of similar origin; as when the late Lord Derby made use of the expression "Dish the Whigs," he meant to discomfit, circumvent them, or defeat them as a party. The root seems to be the Gaelic dith (di), to press, to squeeze, and disne, a die or press.

Duxy, ugly, mischievous; from the Gaelic duaich and duaich-nidh, ugly.

You duxy lubber, brace your lyre;
Still higher yet! you fiend, play higher.

Sic themes were never made to suit
Your dozen o' lugs, ye duxy brute.
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Dwam, a swoon, a fainting fit.
Fast congealin' into a sort of dwam and stupefaction.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Dyke-louper, an immoral unmarried woman, or mother of an illegitimate child. The dyke in this phrase means the marriage tie, obligation, or sacramental wall that prohibits the illicit intercourse of the sexes; and louper, one who treats the wall and its impediment as non-existent, or who despises it by louping, jumping, or leaping over it.

Dyvor, a bankrupt; from the Gaelic dith (di), to destroy, to break; and fear, a man—a broken man or bankrupt. Jamieson derives the word from the French devoir, duty, or to serve.

Smash them, crash them a' to spails,
And rot the dyvors in the jails.

—BURNS: Address of Beelzebub.

E

Eastie-wastie, a person who does not know his own mind, who veers round in his purpose from one side to the other, i.e., from east to west.

Eee-bree, an eyebrow.

There's no a bird in a' this forest
Will do as muckle for me

As dip its wing in the warm water
An' straik it on my ee-bree.

—Johnnie o' Braidislee (when dying alone in the forest).

Eerie, gloomy, wearisome, full of fear.

In mirkiest glen at midnight hour
I'd rove and ne'er be erie, O!
If thro' that glen I gae'd to thee,
My ain kind dearie, O.—BURNS.

It was an erie walk through the still chestnut woods at that still hour of the night.—The Dream Numbers, by T. A. TROLLOPE.

Aft yont the dyke she's heard you bummin'
Wi' erie drone.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Eerie is a most difficult word to explain. I don't know any English word that comes near it in meaning. The feeling induced by eeriness is that sort of superstitious fear that creeps over one in darkness,—that sort of awe we feel in the presence of the unseen and unknown. Anything unusual or incongruous might produce the feeling. "The cry of howlets mak's me erie," says Tannahill. The following anecdote illustrates the feeling when a thing unusual or incongruous is presented:—An Ayrshire farmer, who had visited Ireland, among other uncos he had seen, related that he went to the Episcopal church there, and this being the first time he had ever heard the English service, he was startled by seeing a falla' come in with a long white sark on, down to his heels. "Lord, sir, the sicht o' him made me feel quite erie."—R. DRENNAN.

Eith, easy; etymology uncertain, but neither Gaelic, Flemish, nor German.

It's eith defending a castle that's no besieged.

It's eith learning the cat the way to the kirk.

Eith learned, soon forgotten.

It's eith working when the will's at hame.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Eke, to add to, an addition; "eik to a testament," a codicil to a will. This English word has acquired a convivial meaning in Scotland among toddy-drinkers. When a guest is about to depart, after having had a fair allowance of whisky, the host presses him to "tak an eke"—i.e., another glass, to eke out the quantity. "I hate intemperance," said a northern magistrate, who was reproached by an ultra-temperance advocate for the iniquity of his trade as a distiller, "but I like to see a cannie, respectable, honest man tak' his sax tumblers and an eke in the bosom o' his family. But I canna thole intemperance!"

Eldritch, fearful, terrible. Jamieson has this word elrische, and thinks it is related to elves or evil spirits, and that it is derived from two Anglo-Saxon words signifying elf and rich, or rich in elves or fairies! The true derivation is from the Gaelic oillt, terror, dread, horror, which, combined with droch, bad, wicked, formed the word as Burns and other Scottish writers use it.

On the eldritch hill there grows a thorn.

—PERCY'S Reliques: Sir Carline.

The witches follow

Wi' mony an eldritch screech and hollow.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

I've heard my reverend grannie say,

In lonely glens ye like to stray,

Or where auld ruined castles gray

Nod to the moon,

To fright the nightly wanderer's way

Wi' eldritch croon.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Eme, an uncle; from the Teutonic oheim.

The pummel o' a guid auld saddle,

And Rob my eme bocht me a sack,

Twa lovely lips to lick a ladle,

Gin Jenny and I agree, quo' Jock.

—The Woonin' o' Jenny and Jock.

Ette, to try, to attempt, to endeavour.

For Nannie, far before the rest,
Hard upon noble Maggie prest,
And flew at Tam wi' furious ette,
But little wist she Maggie's metal.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

I etted wi' kindness to soften her pride.
—JAMES BALLANTINE: The Way to Woo.

They that ette to get to the top of the ladder will at least get up some rounds.—They that mint at a gown of gold will always get a sleeve of it.—SCOTT: The Monastery.

Ette.—The correct synonyms are to intend, to expect, to aim at. Intention is the essential element in the meaning of this word.—R. DRENNAN.

Everly, continually, always, for ever.

To be set down to a wheelie (spinning wheel),
An' at it for ever to ca',

An' syne to hae't reel by a chielie (fellow)
That everly cryed to draw.

—WOD' AN' MARRIED AN' A.

Ewe-bucht, a sheepfold; buchtin', or buchtin'-time, the evening time or gloaming, when the cattle are driven into the fold.

When o'er the hill the eastern star
Tells buchtin'-time is near, my jo,
And owsen frae the furrow'd field,
Return sae dowf and wearie, O.

—BURNS: My Ain Kind Dearie, O.

Oh, the broom, the bonnie, bonnie broom,
The broom o' the Cowden knows!
And aye sae sweet as the lassie sang,
In the ewe-bucht, milking her ewes.

—The Broom o' the Cowden Knowes.

The word bucht seems to be an abbreviation of the Gaelic buaigheal, a cow-stall, and buaichaille, a cowherd, a shepherd; buaile, a fold; buaile, folded, or driven into the fold. Jamieson goes to Germany for the root of the word and does not find it.

Eydent, diligent, earnest, zealous; from the Gaelic eud, zeal.

My fair child,

Persuade the kirkmen eydently to pray.

—HENRYSON: The Lion and the Mouse: The Evergreen.

Their master's and their mistress's command

The youngsters a' were warned to obey,
An' mind their labours wi' an eydent hand.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Eyrie, an eagle's nest; from the Gaelic eirich, to rise, and eirigh, a rising.

The eagle and the stork

On cliffs and cedar tops their eyries build.

—MILTON.

'Tis the fire shower of ruin all dreadfully driven

From his eyrie that beacons the darkness of heaven.

—CAMPBELL: Lochiel's Warning.

Eytyn, Etyn, Etaine, Aiten, Red-Aiten. This word, with its different but not unsimilar spellings, appears to be a corruption of the Norse Jotun, a giant. It was formerly used in England as well as in Scotland. Hynde Etyn, or the gentle giant, is the title of a Scottish ballad in Kinloch's Collection.

They say the King of Portugal cannot sit at his meat, but the giants and etyns will come and snatch it from him.—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Burning Pestle.

F

Fa', the Scottish abbreviation of fall. The word is used by Burns in the immortal song of "A man's a man for a' that," in a sense which has given rise to much doubt as to its meaning:—

A king can mak' a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that;
But an honest man's aboon his might,
Gude faith, he mauna fa' that.

The context would seem to imply that fa' means to try, to attempt. No author except Burns uses the word in this sense; and none of the varieties of words in which fall or the act of falling, either physically or metaphorically, is the primary meaning, meets the necessities of Burns's stanza. Halliwell has jay as an archaic English word, with five different meanings, of which the fourth is to succeed, to act, to work. The fa' of Burns may possibly be a variety of the English word, current in Ayrshire in his time. It finds no place in Jamieson.

Burns did not originate the idea, so well expressed, and to which he has given such wide currency. It is to be found in an anecdote recorded of King James VI. and his faithful old nurse, who came uninvited from Edinburgh to pay him a visit. It is told that the King was delighted to see her, and asked her kindly what he could do for her. After some hesitation, she replied that she desired nothing for herself, only that she wanted his Majesty to make her son a gentleman. "Ah, Jeanie, Jeanie!" said the King, "I can mak' him a duke, if ye like; but I canna mak' him a gentleman unless he mak's himsel' ane!"

Faird, a journey, a course. Jamieson thinks it signifies a hasty and noted effort, and quotes a Mid-Lothian phrase, "Let them alane; it's but a faird, it'll no last lang; they'll no win (arrive) far afore us." The word is evidently from the same source as fare, to travel, as in way-farer; the Teutonic fahren, to go, to travel; and fähre, a ferry, a passage over the water, and gefährlich, dangerous; as originally applied to travelling in primitive and unsettled times.

Fairdy, clever, tight, handy; fair to do.

With ane ev'n keel before the wind,
She is right fairdy with a sail.

The Fleming Bark—belonging to Edinburgh.

—ALLAN RAMSAY; The Evergreen.

Fairin' signifies either reward or punishment; one's deserts. Fair fa'! may good or fair things befall you! is equivalent to a benison or benediction.

Jamieson derives the word from fair or market, and thinks it means a present bought at a fair. But this is guess-work, and does not meet the sense of the passage in "Tam o' Shanter." Possibly it has some connection with the Teutonic gefahr, danger, also a doom or punishment; supposed, in its favourable term, to be derived from a present purchased at a fair to be bestowed as a gift on one who was not at it.

Fair fa' your honest, sonesie face,
Great chieftain o' the puddin' race.

—BURNS: To a Haggis.

Ah, Tam! ah, Tam! thou't get thy fairin';
In hell they'll roast thee like a herrin'.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Fank, a coil, a tangle, a noose; possibly from fang, to take hold of. To fank a horse in a field, to catch him with a rope noose or lasso; fankit, entangled; a fank o' toes, a coil of ropes. It may also be the root of the English funk, i.e., to be in a coil of perplexity or dread. The common derivation of funk, from the German funk, a sparkle of light, is not tenable. The Gaelic fainnich signifies to curl, from fainne, a ring.

Farle, a small oaten or wheaten cake, the fourth part of a bannock; from furthel, or fourth part; the Flemish viertel and German fiertel.

An' there'll be gude lapper-milk kebbucks,
An' sowens, an' farles, an' baps.

—The Blithesome Bridal.

Fash, to bother, to worry, to distress one's self; from the French se fâcher, to be angry.

Fashious, troublesome.

Speak out, and never fash your thumb.
—BURNS: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

The Rev. John Brown of Whitburn was riding out one day on an old pony, when he was accosted by a rude youth. "I say, Mr. Brown, what gars your horse's tail wag that way?" "Oh!" replied Brown, "just what gars your tongue wag; it's fashed wi' a weakness."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Fazard, dastard, coward.

They are mair fashious nor of feck;
Yon fasards durst not, for their neck,
Climb up the crag with us.

—MONTGOMERY: The Cherry and the Slae.

The root of this word would appear to be the Gaelic fas, vacant, hollow, good-for-nothing, with the addition of ard, as in dastard, coward, wizard, a suffix which signifies eminent, or in a high degree. Thus, fasard or fasard means worthless in the extreme.

Feck, power, activity, vigour. Feck seems to be derivable from the Gaelic fiach, worth, value. Feckful, full of power. Feckless, without power or vigour of body or mind. Worcester, in his dictionary, derives this word from effectless.

Many a feckful chield this day was slain.
—BLIND HARRY's Wallace.

The lazy luxury which feckless loons indulge in.—SCOTT.

Feckless folk are aye fain o' ane anither.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Poor devil! see him o'er his trash,
As feckless as a withered rash.
—BURNS: To a Haggis.

That feckless fouter!—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Fell, to kill.

The sister of a lady, who had died of a surfeit from eating too bountifully of strawberries and cream, was consoled with by a friend, who said to her, "I had hoped your sister would have lived many years." "Leeve!" she replied, "how could she leeve, when she just felled hersel' at Craigo wi' strawberries an' cream?"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Fend, to ward off—probably a contraction from defend. Fend also means to prosper or do well, to provide, to live comfortably—possibly from the idea of warding off want or poverty.

Can she mak' nae better fend for them than that?—SCOTT: The Monastery.

But gie them guid coo-milk their fill,
Till they be fit to fend themsel'.

—BURNS: Dying Words of Poor Mailie.

Here stands a shed to fend the showers,
And screen our countra gentry.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

How is he fendin', John Tod, John Tod?
He is scouring the land wi' a song in his hand.

—CHAMBERS'S Scots Songs: John Tod.

Fendy, clever at contrivances in difficulty, good at making a shift.

"Alice," he said, "was both canny and fendy."—SCOTT: Waverley.

Ferlie, a wonder, to wonder, wonderful.

Who harkened ever slike a ferlie thing.

—CHAUCER: The Reeve's Tale.

On Malvern hills

Me befel a ferly.

—PIERS PLOUGHMAN.

Never breathe out of kin and make your friends ferly at you.

The longer we live the more ferlies we see.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

And tell what new taxation's comin',
And ferlie at the folk in Lunnon.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Ferlie and wonner. In this phrase wonner is a corruption of the English wonder; a contemptuous and ludicrous term to designate a person or thing that is strangely, wondrously ugly, ill-favoured, or mean; almost synonymous with the modern English slang a guy or a cure. Burns uses both words in the same poem:—

Ha! where ye gaun, ye crawlin' ferlie!

Ye ugly, creepin', blastit wonner,
Detested, shunned by saint and sinner?

—To a Certain Insect, on seeing one on a Lady's Bonnet at Church.

Ferrikie. Jamieson cites this as an Upper Clydesdale word for "strong, robust." He derives it from the German ferig, which he translates expeditus, alacer; but there is no such word as ferig in the German language. It is more probably from the Gaelic fear, a man, fearachas, manhood, and fearail, manly, virile; strong, lusty. The Welsh has ffer, solid, strong.

Feu, to let land for building; a possession held on payment of a certain rent to the feudal proprietor, heritor, or owner of the soil. Where the English advertise "land to let for building purposes," the Scotch more tersely say "land to feu."

There is, or was lately, a space of unoccupied ground on the "Corran" at Oban, contiguous to Dunolly Castle, in the midst of which on a pole was a board inscribed "This land to feu." An English bishop on his holiday tour having observed the announcement, and wondering what it meant, turned to his wife and asked her if she knew. She did not, and the bishop thereupon hazarded the conjecture that it meant to "fire," from the French feu. "Very likely," replied the lady, "to burn the grass." Before the bishop left Oban his ignorance on the subject was dispelled by a guest at the table-d'hôte of the hotel to whom he applied for information. "Curious language, the Scotch!" was his lordship's rejoinder.—C. M.

Fey, fated, bewitched, unlucky, doomed; one whose fate is foreknown or prophesied; from the Gaelic faidh, a prophet, the Latin vates.

Let the fate fall upon the feyst.

Take care of the man that God has marked, for he's no fey.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

We'll turn again, said good Lord John,
But no, said Rothiemay,
My steed's trepanned, my bridle's broke,
I fear this day I'm fey.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

They hacked and hashed, while broad-swords clashed,
And through they dashed, and hewed,
and smashed,
Till fey men died awa, man.

—The Battle of Sheriffmuir.

Fidgin'-fain, extremely anxious; from fidge, the English fidget, to be restless or anxious, and fain, willing or desirous.

It pat me fidgin'-fain to hear it.

—BURNS: Epistle to Lapraik.

Fiel. The glossaries to Burns explain this word to mean "smooth and comfortable," apparently from the context:—

Oh, leeze me on my spinnin'-wheel,
And leeze me on my rock and reel,
Frae tap to tae that cleeds me bien,
And haps me fiel and warm at e'en!

—Bess and her Spinning-Wheel.

Jamieson, who has feil and fiel, defines the words to mean "soft and smooth like velvet, silky to the touch, and also clean, neat, comfortable." The word must not be confounded with feil, feill, fele, which signify much, many, and very, and are clearly derivable from the Teutonic viel, which has the same meaning; as viel gelt, much money. Jamieson derives the word used by Burns from the Icelandic felldr, habitis idorem; but this is exceedingly doubtful. The Gaelic has fiat, generous, liberal, bountiful, good, hospitable; and possibly it is in this sense that Bess applies the word to the spinnin'-wheel that provides her with raiment.

Fient, none, not a particle of; equivalent to "the devil a bit," from fiend, the devil; fient-hait, not an iota, the devil a bit.

But though he was o' high degree,

The fient o' pride—nae pride had he.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

The queerest shape that e'er I saw,

For fient a wame it had ava!

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Fient-hact o't wad hae pierced the heart

O' a kail runt.—BURNS: Idem.

Fiere, a friend, a comrade. This word is supposed by some to be a misprint for frere, a brother.

And here's a hand, my trusty fiere,
And gie's a hand o' thine.

—BURNS: Auld Langsyne.

This word may either be a synonym for the Latin vir and the Gaelic fear, a man, or may be derived from fior, true, or a true man. The Scottish poet Douglas has fior for sound and healthy. It is sometimes spelt feer.

First-foot, the first person who is met by lad or lass in the morning.

Early morning she drest up
And all her maides fair,
The ploughman chiel was her first-foot
As she went to take the air.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

Flaff, a momentary display.

Ga' I ever for a flaff in the Park forget my ain cosie bield.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Flamfoo. According to Jamieson this word signifies a gaudily-dressed woman, or any gaudy ornament of female dress. He derives it from an alleged old English word meaning "moon-shine in the water!" It seems, however, to come from the Gaelic flann, corrupted into flam, red, the showy colour so much admired by people of uneducated taste; conjoined with the Scottish fu' for full. The English word flaunting, and the phrase flaunts, fiery red ribbons, are from the same root.

Flannen, the Scottish as well as the English vernacular flannen for flannel, seems to be preferable to flannel as the correct pronunciation of the word. Both are correct if the etymology be correct, which traces the word to the Gaelic flann, red, and olann, wool. In the early ages of civilisation, when wool was first woven for garments to clothe mankind, the favourite colours were red and yellow. In Hakluyt's Voyages it is said—"By chance they met a canoe of Dominicans, to the people whereof he gave a waistcoat of yellow flannel." Probably red was the first dye used, whence flann-olann, red wool. At an after time, when gaudy colours were not so much in request, the wool was bleached, whence blanket or blanquette, whitened.

I wadna be surprised to spy
You on an auld wife's flannen toy (cap),
Or aiblins some bit doddie boy,

On's wylie-coat;

But Miss's fine Lunardi, fy!

How daur ye do't?

—BURNS: To a Louse, on seeing one on a Lady's Bonnet at Church.

Flauch or flaucht, a flash of lightning, a sudden blaze in the sky; from the Flemish flakkeren and flikkerin, to flicker, to shine out quickly or instantaneously.

The thunder crack'd, and flauchts did rift
Frae the black vizard o' the lift.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Vision.

Fierce as any fire-flaucht fell.

—Christ's Kirk on the Green.

Flaw, a burst of bad weather, from the Gaelic fluch, a rain-storm.

Like an auld scart (cormorant) before a flaw.—The Antiquary.

Fleech or fleich, to pet, to wheedle, to cajole; also, to entreat or supplicate with fair words. A fleeching day is a day that promises to be fine, but that possibly may not turn out so. Possibly from the French flechir, to give way, to ask humbly, instead of demanding loudly.

Duncan fleeched and Duncan prayed—
Ha! ha! the wooin' o't.—BURNS.

Expect na, sir, in this narration,
A fleechin', flatterin' dedication.
—BURNS: Epistle to Gavin Hamilton.

Hoot! toot! man—keep a calm sough.
Better to fleech a fool than fight wi' him.
—SCOTT: The Monastery.

Fleer, a gibe, a taunt—etymology doubtful. The Flemish has fleers, a box on the ear.

Oh, dinna ye mind o' this very fleer,
When we were a' riggit out to gang to Sherramuir,
Wi' stanes in our aprons?

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Ballads: The Threatened Invasion.

Fley, to scare, to frighten. Etymology unknown, but possibly from flee, to run away for fear, whence fley, to cause to run away for fear, to frighten.

A wee thing fleys cowards.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

It spak' right howe, My name is Death,
But be na' fley'd.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Flichter, to flutter, to fly feebly; a great number of small objects flying in the air, as "a flichter of birds;" a multitude of small objects flying, floating, or fluttering in the air, as a flichter or flight of birds; a flichter of motes in the sunbeams; a flichter of heavy or large snow-flakes. To flichter is to flutter, to quiver with joyous excitement, and also to startle or alarm. The word is evidently akin to the English flight and the Teutonic flucht.

The bird maun flichter that has but ae wing.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.
The expectant weethings, toddlin', sprachle through,

To meet their dad, wi' flichterin' noise and glee.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Flinders, fragments, splinters.

He put his fingers to the lock,

I wat he handled them sickerlie;

And doors of deal and bands of steel

He gart them all in flinders flee.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: The Three Brothers.

Flinging-tree, a flail, the pole of a carriage, a bar of wood in any agricultural implement.

The thresher's weary flingin'-tree

The lee-lang day had tir'd me,

And when the day had clos'd his e'e

Far i' the west,

Ben i' the spence, right pensivelie,

I gaed to rest.

—BURNS: The Vision.

Flit, to remove from one residence to another; a flittin', a removal.

As soon the burnside she gaed slow in the flittin',

Fare ye weel, Lucy, was ilka bird's sang;

She gaed by the stable where Jamie was stannin',

Richt sair was his kind heart the flittin' to see.

—Lucy's Flittin', by WILLIAM LAIDLAW (the steward, amanuensis, and trusted friend of Sir Walter Scott).

Flite or flyte, to reproach, to blame, to animadvert, to find fault with.

They flyte me wi' Jamie because he is poor;
But summer is comin', cauld winter's awa,
An' he'll come back an' see me in spite
o' them a'

—GEORGE HALKET: Logie o' Buchan.

Hed! gude-wife! ye're a flytin' body;
Ye hae the will, but ye want the wit.

—SIR ALEXANDER BOSWELL: A Matrimonial Duel.

Floan, to flirt. Jamieson says that "floan means to show attachment, or court regard in an indiscreet way," and derives the word from the Icelandic floa, stolidus. Is it not rather from the old English flone, arrows (Halliwell and Wright), whence metaphorically to dart glances from the eye, and consequently to flirt or cast amorous looks? The Kymric Celtic has flwyn, a splinter, a thin wand, an arrow.

And for yon giglet hussies i' the glen,
That night and day are floaning at the men.—ROSS's Helenore.

Flunkey, a servant in livery; metaphorically applied to a person who abjectly flatters the great. The word was unknown to literature until the time of Burns. Thackeray and Carlyle in our own day have made it classical English, although the most recent lexicographers have not admitted it or its derivative, flunkeyism, to the honours of the dictionary.

Our laird gets in his rackèd rents,
* * * * *

He rises when he likes himsel'.

His flunkies answer to his bell.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

The word is supposed to be derived from the Gaelic flann, red, and cas, a leg or foot—red-legs, applied to the red or crimson plush breeches of footmen. The word red-shanks was applied to the kilted Highlanders by the English, and hence the Highland retort of flunkiey to the English.

I think this derivation wrong; vlonk in Danish signifies proud, haughty.—LORD NEAVES.

Fodgel, sometimes written and pronounced fodyell plump, short, corpulent, and good-tempered. A man in Scottish parlance may be stout and plump without being fodgel, as fodgel implies good nature, urbanity, and cheerfulness, as well as plumpness.

If in your bounds ye chance to light
Upon a fine, fat fodgel wight,
Of stature short, but genius bright,
That's he, mark weel.

—BURNS: On the Peregrinations of Captain Grose Collecting Antiquities throughout the Kingdom.

Fog, moss; from the Gaelic bog or bhog, moist, soft.

"And so, John," said the minister, "I understand ye have gone over to the Independents?" "Deed, sir," said John, "that's true." "Oh, John," rejoined the minister, "I'm sure ye ken that a rowlin' stone gathers nae fog." "Aye," said John, "that's true, too; but can ye tell me what gude the fog does to the stone?"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Fogie, a dull, slow man, unable or unwilling to reconcile himself to the ideas and manners of the new generation. The derivation of this word, which Thackeray did much to popularise in England, is uncertain, though it seems most probable that it comes from "foggy," for a foggy, misty, hazy intellect, unable to see the things that are obvious to clearer minds; or it may be from the Gaelic fogaire, an exile, a banished man. In the United States the word is generally applied to an ultra-Conservative in politics.

Ay, though we be Old fogies three,
We've not so dulled as not to dine;
And not so old
As to be cold
To wit, to beauty, and to wine.
—All the Year Round.

Fog-moss, foggage, tall grass used for fodder. The etymology is uncertain. The English fodder is from the Gaelic fodar; but this scarcely affords a clue to fog or foggage. Though possibly foggage may be a corruption of the old and not yet obsolete fodderage.

Thy wee bit housie too in ruin!
Its silly wa's the winds are strewin',
An' naething left to big a new ane,
O' foggage green,
An' bleak December's winds ensuin',
Baith snell and keen.
—BURNS: To a Mouse.

Forbears, ancestors.

Forbye, besides, in addition to, over and above.

Forbye sax mae I sell't awa.
—BURNS: Auld Farmer.

Forbye some new uncommon weapons.
—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Foreanent, directly opposite.

Foremost. In English this word signifies first as regards place. In Scottish parlance it also signifies first as regards time.

They made a paction 'twixt them twa,
They made it firm and sure,
That whoe'er should speak the foremost word
Should get up an' bar the door.
—The Barrin' o' oor Door.

Forfoughten, sometimes written and pronounced forfoughen, worn out with struggling or fatigue. And though forfoughten sair enough, Yet unco proud to leave.—BURNS.
I am but like a forfoughen bound,
Has been fighting in a syke (ditch).
—Border Minstrelsy: Hobbie Noble.

Forgather, to meet.

Twa dogs
Forgathered ance upon a time.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Forjeskit, wearied out, jaded, exhausted; derivation uncertain, but probably from the Flemish or Dutch patois.

The fiend, forjeskit, tried to escape
Thro' frequent changing o' his shape.
—BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Fou, drunk, is generally supposed to be a corruption of full (i.e., of liquor); but if such were the fact the word ought to be contracted into fu', as waefu', sorrowfu', which cannot be written waefou or sorrowfou. Fou, in French, signifies insane, a word that might be applied to an intoxicated person; but if the Scottish phrase be not derived from the French, it ought to be written fu, and not fou. Possibly the root of the word is the Gaelic fuath (pronounced fuà), which signifies hatred, abhorrence, aversion, whence it may have been applied to a person in a hateful and abhorrent state of drunkenness. This, however, is a mere suggestion. Jamieson has fowsom, filthy, impure, obscene.

We are na' fou, we're na' that fou,
We've just a wee drap in our e'e.

—BURNS: Willie Brewed a Peck o' Maut.

Fouter, an expression of extreme contempt for a hateful person. The French foutre has the same, and even a worse meaning. Both the Lowland Scotch and the French are from the Gaelic and Celtic fuath, hatred.

Fouth or rowth, abundance. Fouth is from full, on the same principle as the English words tillth from till, spilth from spill, youth from youngeth, growth from grow, drowth from dryeth. Rrowth has the same signification, and is from row or roll, to flow on like a stream.

He has a frowth o' auld knick-nackets,
Rusty ain and jinglin' jackets.

—BURNS: To Captain Grose.

They that hae rowth o' butter may lay it thick on their scones.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Fremit, frammit, strange, unrelated, unfamiliar; from the Teutonic fremd, foreign.

Ye ha'e lien a' wrang, lassie,
In an unco bed,
Wi' a fremit man.—BURNS.

And mony a friend that kissed his caup
Is now a frammit wight,
But it's ne'er sae wi' Whisky Jean.

—BURNS: The Five Carlins.

Frist, to delay, to give credit; from the Teutonic fristen, to spare, to respite.

The thing that's fristed is nae forgi'en.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Frush, brittle.

Oh, woe betide the frush saugh wand
(willow wand),

And woe betide the bush o' briar,
It brak into my true love's hand.

—Border Minstrelsy: Annan Water.

Fulzie, surfeited with gluttony and over-eating; full of meat and food.

Enough to sicken a fulzie man.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Furth, out of doors, to go forth, to go out. The muckle furth, is the full, free open air. Furthy, forward, frank, free, affable, open in behaviour. Furth-setter, one who sets forth or puts forth; a publisher, an author.

Sir Penny is of a noble spreit,
A furthy man, and a far secand;
There is no matter ends compleit
Till he set to his seil and hand.

—A Panegyrick on Sir Penny:
The Evergreen.

Fusionless, pithless, silly, sapless, senseless; corrupted from "foison," the old English word for plenty; the opposite of "geason," scarce.

For seven lang years I ha'e lain by his side,
And he's but a fusionless bodie, O!

—BURNS: The Deuks Dang o'er my Daddy.

The mouths of fasting multitudes are crammed wi' fusionless bran, instead of the sweet word in season.—SCOTT: Old Mortality.

Fusionless.—In Bailey's Dictionary the word foison means "the natural juice or moisture of the grass or other herbs, the heart and strength of it:" used in Suffolk.—R. DRENNAN.

Fy! or fye! This exclamation is not to be confounded with the English fye! or O fye! or the Teutonic pfui! which are used as mild reproofs of any act of shame or impropriety.

Fy! let us a' to the bridal,
For there will be lirting there;
For Jock's to be married to Jeanie,
The lass wi' the gowden hair.

—Old Song.

In this old song, all the incidents and allusions are expressive of joy and hilarity. Jamieson suggests that fy means "make haste!" "Fye-gae-to," he says, "means much ado, a great hurry; and fye haste, a very great bustle, a hurry." He gives no derivation. As the Teutonic cannot supply one, it is possible that the root is the Gaelic faich, look! behold! lo! in which sense "Fye! let us a' to the bridal," might be translated "Look ye! let us all go to the bridal."

Fyke, to be ludicrously and fussily busy about trifles, to be restless without adequate reason, akin to fidget, which is possibly from the same root. The word is also used as a noun. Fiddle-fyke and fiddle-ma-fike are intensifications of the meaning, and imply contempt for the petty trifling of the person who fykes.

Some drowsy bumble,

Wha can do nought but fyke and fumble.

—BURNS: On a Scotch Bard.

Gin he 'bout Norrie lesser fyke had made.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

Weening that ane sae braw and gentle-like
For nae guid ends was makin' sic a fyke.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

Fytte, the subdivision of a long poem, now called a canto. Percy, in a note in his "Ancient Reliques," considers the word to signify no more than a division, a part to "fit" on to another. As the bards of the Druids, who sung in their religious festivals, and who delivered their precepts to the people in short verses of couplets or triads—better for committal to memory than long prose homilies would have been—were called fiadhs or prophets, it is possible that that word, and not the English fit, as Dr. Percy says, was the origin of fytte as applied to the subdivision of a sacred song.

G

Gabbock, a hunk, a large piece or slice.

And there'll be
Fouth o' gude gabbocks o' skate.
—The Blithesome Bridal.

Gaberlunzie, a wallet or bag carried by beggars for collecting in kind the gifts of the charitable; whence gaberlunzie-man, a beggar.

Oh, blithe be the auld gaberlunzie-man,
Wi' his wallet o' wit he fills the lan';
He's a warm Scotch heart an' a braid
Scotch tongue,
An' kens a' the auld sangs that ever were sung!—JAMES BALLANTINE.

To love her for aye he gied her his aith,
Quo' she, To leave thee I will be laith,
My winsome gaberlunzie-man.
—The Gaberlunzie-Man (a ballad attributed to King James V.)

Much research and ingenuity have been exercised to find the etymological origin of this peculiarly Scottish word. Jamieson says that gaberlunzie or gaberlunzie means a beggar's bag or wallet, and implies that the word has been transferred from the bag to the bearer of it.

Gae-through-land, a wanderer, a vagrant, a pilgrim, an exile, a gangrel.

Oh, God forbid, said fair Annie,
That e'er the like fa' in my hand;
Should I forsake my ain gude lord,
And follow you, a gae-through-land.
—BUCHAN'S Ancient Scottish Ballads, 1828.

Gair, the English gore, an insertion in a skirt, robe, or other article of dress; also a strip of a different colour inserted as a plait or ornament, sometimes signifying a coloured belt from which the sword or other weapon was suspended; *gair*ed or gairy, streaked with many colours; piebald, as a gairy cow or horse.

Young Johnston had a nut-brown sword
Hung low down by his gair,
And he ritted it through the young colonel,
That word he never spak' mair.
—HERD'S Collection: Young Johnston.

Gale, to sing, whence nightingale, the bird that sings by night. The word is usually derived from the Teutonic, in which language, however, it only exists in the single word nachtigall. Jamieson refers it to the Swedish gäll (gale), a sharp, penetrating, or piercing sound. Probably, however, it is akin to the Gaelic guil, to lament, and guileag, that which sings or warbles; and a gale of wind is referable to the Kymric or Welsh galar, mourning, lamentation; galw, (galn), to call, to invoke; and galaries, mournful, sad, so called because of the whistling, piping sound of a storm.

In May the gowk (cuckoo) begins to gale,
In May deer draw to down and dale,
In May men mell with feminie,
And ladies meet their lovers leal,
When Phebus is in Gemini.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Evergreen.

Gallie-hooiin', making a loud noise, blustering, talking violently without sense or reason. Gullie-hoolie, a loud, blustering, talkative, and conceited fool. These two words seem to be derivable from the Gaelic gal or guil, to cry out, and uille, all; whence gal-uille, all outcry or bluster, or nothing but outcry and noise. Gilhooly, a well-known Irish patronymic, is possibly of the same Gaelic origin, applied to a noisy orator.

Gang, gae, gaed, gate. These words, that are scarcely retained even in colloquial English, do constant duty in the Lowland Scotch; they are all derived from the Flemish. Gang and gae are the English go; gaed is the English went, and gate is the road or way by which one goes. "Gang your ain gate," means go your own road, or have your own way. The English gate, signifying a doorway, a barred or defended entrance, is a relic of the older and more extended meaning of the Scotch.

I gaed a waefu' gate yestreen,
A gate I fear I'll dearly rue.

—BURNS.

Gangrel, vagrant, vagabond wandering; from gang, to go.

Ae night at e'en, a merry core
Of randie gangrel bodies
At Posie Nansie's held the splore.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

This word is sometimes employed to designate a young child who is first beginning to walk.

Gardies, defensive weapons; from the Gaelic gairdein, an arm or armour, and the French garde; as in the phrase prenez-garde, take care, or defend yourself.

He wields his gardies,
Or at the worst his aiken rung (oaken staff).
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Garraivory. This curious word signifies, according to Jamieson, "folly and revelling of a frolicsome kind." He thinks it is evidently corrupted from gil-ravery and gilravage, which are words of a similar meaning. Gilravage he defines as "to hold a merry meeting with noise and riot." He attempts no etymology. It seems, however, that garraivory is akin to the French charivari, or the loud, discordant uproar of what in England is called "marrow bones and cleavers," when a gang of rough people show their displeasure by serenading an unpopular person—such, for instance, as a very old man who has married a very young wife—by beating bones against butchers' axes and cleavers, or by rattling pokers and shovels against iron pots and pans under his windows, so as to create a painful and discordant noise. The word and the custom are both of Celtic origin, and are derived from the Gaelic garbh, rough, and bairich or bhairich, any obstreperous and disagreeable noise; also the lowing, roaring, or routing of cattle. The initial g or c of the Gaelic is usually softened into the English and French ch, as the k in kirk becomes ch in the English church, and as the Latin carus and the Italian caro become cher in French.

Gash, sagacious, talkative. Jamieson defines the word, as a verb, "to talk much in a confident way, to talk freely and fluently;" and as an adjective, "shrewd, sagacious." It seems derivable from the Gaelic gais (pronounced gash), a torrent, an overflow; the English gush, i.e., an overflow or torrent of words, and hence by extension of meaning applied to one who has much to say on every subject; eloquent, or, in an inferior sense, loquacious.

He was a gash and faithful tyke.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Here farmers gash in ridin' graith.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

In comes a gaucie gash good-wife,

And sits down by the fire.—Idem.

Gaucie, jolly, brisk, lively.

His gaucie tail in upward curl.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

In comes a gaucie gash good-wife,

And sits down by the fire.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Gaucie, big, of large dimensions; jolly, perhaps. It has almost the same meaning as gash, with the additional idea of size; very like the English use of the word "jolly"—a jolly lot—a jolly pudding, &c. The Scotch use gaucie in precisely the same way.—R. D.

Gaud, a bar, the shaft of a plough; gaudsman, a plough-boy. The English goad signifies a bar or rod, and to goad is to incite or drive with a stick or prong. The word is derived from the Gaelic gat, a prong, a bar of wood or iron, and gath, a sting.

Young Jockie was the blithest lad

In a' our town or here awa';

Fu' blithe he whistled at the gaud,

Fu' lightly danced he in the ha'.

—BURNS: Young Jockie.

I've three mischievous boys,

Rum deils for rantin' and for noise—

A gaudsman ane, a thrasher t'other.

—BURNS: The Inventory.

They'll turn me in your arms, Janet,

A red-hot gaud o' airn.

—Ballad of the Young Tamlane.

Gauf or gawf, a loud, discordant laugh; the English slang guffaw. According to Jamieson, it was used by John Knox. Gaup, a kindred word, signifies a large mouth wide opened; whence, possibly, the origin of the Flemish gapen, and the English gape, which, according to the late John Kemble, the tragedian, ought to be pronounced with the broad a, as in ah. Gauffin, a giggling, light-headed person, seems to be a word of the same parentage. Gawpie is a silly person who laughs without reason.

Tehee, quo' she, and gied a gawf.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: A Brash of Wooing: The Evergreen.

Gauner, to bark, to scold vociferously.

Gaunt, to yawn. Gaunt-at-the-door, an indolent, useless person, who sits at the door and yawns; an idler, one without mental resources.

This mony a day I've groaned and gaunted
To ken what French mischief was brewing.

—BURNS.

Auld gude-man, ye're a drunken carle,
And a' the day ye gape and gaunt.

—SIR ALEXANDER BOSWELL.

Gaupie, a silly fellow, from gaup, to yawn or gape; one who yawns, from weariness, indifference, or stupidity, when he is expected to pay intelligent attention to what is said of him. A word of similar import, founded upon the same idea of listless and foolish yawning, is found in the English phrase to go mooning about, a word that has no reference to the moon, but that is derived from the Gaelic meunan, a yawn; meuna-nach, yawning; and dean-meunan, to yawn or make a yawn.

Gawk, to romp, applied to girls who are too fond of the society of men, and who either play roughly themselves or suffer men to play roughly in their company. The word is probably a variety of geck, to sport or mock (see that word).

Gawkie, a clumsy or inexperienced person, from the French gauche, the left hand, and gaucherie, clumsiness. The word is colloquial in England as well as in Scotland.

Gear, money, wealth, property, appurtenance; from the Teutonic gehörig, belonging to, appertaining to.

He'll poid (seize) their gear.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

And gather gear by every wile
That's justified by honour.

—BURNS: Epistle to a Young Friend.

Geck, to bear one's self haughtily, to toss the head in glee or scorn, to mock; possibly from the Flemish gek, a vain fool.

Adieu, my liege! may freedom geck
Beneath your high protection.

i —BURNS: The Dream. To George III.

Gee. To take the gee, is an old colloquialism, signifying to take umbrage or offence, to give way to a sudden start of petulance and ill-humour. Jamieson derives it from the Icelandic geig, offence, in default of tracing it to another origin. But the derivation is doubtful.

On Tuesday, to the bridal feast,

Came fiddlers flocking free;

But hey! play up the rinaway bride,

For she has ta'en the gee.

Woman's love a wilfu' thing,

An' fancy flies fu' free;

Then hey! play up the rinaway bride

For she has ta'en the gee.

—HERD'S Collection.

"My wife has ta'en the gee," is the title of an old and once extremely popular song.

Gell, brisk, keen, sharp, active; from the Gaelic geall, ardour, desire, love; geallmhor, greatly desirous; and geallmhorachd, high desire and aspiration.

Gell, intense, as applied to the weather; a gell frost is a keen frost. "There's a gey gell in the market to-day," i.e., a pretty quick sale; "in great gell," in great spirits and activity; "on the gell," a phrase applied to one who is bent on making merry.—JAMIESON.

Gerss. "This term," says Jamieson, "is well known in the councils of boroughs. When a member becomes refractory, the ruling party vote him out at the next election. This they call gerssing him, or turning him out to gerss. The phrase," he adds, "is evidently borrowed from the custom of turning out a horse to graze when there is no immediate use for his service." Perhaps, however, the etymology is not quite so evident as Jamieson supposed. The Gaelic geur or garr signifies to cut, to cut off, to shear; gearraich or geurraich, to shorten, and gearradh, a cutting; gearran, a gelding; gearrta, cut. To cut or shorten, rather than to graze or turn out to graze, appears, pace Jamieson, to be the real root of the word. Jamieson has the same word differently spelled as girse, to turn out of office; girse-folk, cotters at will, liable to be ejected at short notice, to which the Gaelic etymology of geurr and its derivatives applies with more force than that which he suggests from grass.

Gey, a humorous synonym for very. This word in Jamieson's Dictionary is rendered "tolerable, considerable, worthy of notice." "A gey when," he says, means "a great number." It is doubtful whether the derivation be from the English gay or the Gaelic gu. In vulgar English, when "jolly" is sometimes used for "gay," "a jolly lot" would be equivalent to the Scottish "a gey when." In Gaelic gu is an adverbial prefix, as in gu leoir, plentiful or plentifully, whence the phrase, "whisky galore," plenty of whisky; gu fìor, with truth or truly.

A miller laughing at him (the fool of the parish) for his witlessness, the fool said, "There are some things I ken and some things I dinna ken." On being asked what he knew, he said, "I ken a miller has aye a gey fat sow!" "And what do ye no ken?" said the miller. "I dinna ken at wha's expense she's fed."—DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

The word is sometimes followed by an, as in the phrase "gey an toom," very empty; "gey an fou," very drunk. The word gaylies, meaning tolerably well in health, is probably from the same source as gey, as in the common salutation in Glasgow and Edinburgh, "How's a' wi' ye the day?" "Oh, gailies, gailies!" The editor of Noctes Ambrosianæ, Edinburgh, 1866, erroneously explains gey an to mean rather.

Your factors, grieves, trustees, and bailies, I canna say but they do gailies.

—BURNS: Address of Beelzebub.

Mr. Clark, of Dalreoch, whose head was vastly disproportioned to his body, met Mr. Dunlop one day. "Weel, Mr. Clark, that's a great head of yours." "Indeed, it is, Mr. Dunlop; it could contain yours inside of it." "Just sae," replied Mr. Dunlop, "I was e'en thinking it was gey an toom (very empty)."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Gielanger, one who is slow to pay his debts; etymology unknown. It has been thought that this word is an abbreviation of the request to give longer or gie langer time to pay a debt, but this is doubtful. The Flemish and Dutch gijzelen signifies to arrest for debt, gijzeling, arrest for debt, and gizel kammer, a debtor's prison; and this is most probably the origin of gielanger.

The greedy man and the gielanger are well met.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Gillravage, to plunder, also to live riotously, uproariously, and violently; from the Gaelic gille, a young man, and rabair, litigious, troublesome; rabach, quarrelsome.

Ye had better stick to your auld trade o' blackmail and gillravaging. Better steal nowt than nations.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Gilpie or gilpey, a saucy young girl.

I was a gilpey then, I'm sure
I wasna past fifteen.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

I mind when I was a gilpie o' a lassock, seeing the Duke—him that lost his head in London.—SCOTT: Old Mortality.

Gin (g hard, as in give) signifies if.

Oh, gin my love were yon red rose
That grows upon the castle wa;
And I myself a drap o' dew,
Into her bonnie breast to fa'.

—HERD'S Collection, 1776.

Gin a body meet a body
Comin' through the rye.
—Old Song (rearranged by BURNS).

Horne Tooke, in his letter to Dunning, Lord Ashburton, on the English particles, conjunctions, and prepositions, derives if from given; "if you are there," i.e., given the fact that you are there. The more poetical Scottish word gin is strongly corroborative of Horne Tooke's inference.

Girdle, a gridiron or brander, a circular iron plate used for roasting oat-cakes over the fire.

Wi' quaffing and daffing,
They ranted and they sang,
Wi' jumping and thumping
The very girdle rang.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

The carline brocht her kebbuck ben,
Wi' girdle-cakes weel toasted broon.

—Tea-Table Miscellany: Andro and his Cutty Gun.

On reading the passage in the Bible to a child where the words occur, "He took Paul's girdle," the child said with much confidence, "I ken what he took that for." On being asked to explain, she replied at once, "To bake his bannocks on!"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Girnagain, from girn or grin; a derisive epithet applied to a person who was always on the grin, with or without reason.

An' there'll be girnagain Gibbie
An' his glaiokit wife, Jeannie Bell.

—The Blithesome Bridal.

Girnel, a meal-chest; from corn, kern, and kernel.

Amaist as roomy as a minister's girnel.
—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Glack, a ravine, a cleft in the ground.

Deep i' the glack and round the well,
Their mystic rites I canna tell.

—John o' Arnha'.

Glaik, glaiokit, giddy-headed, thoughtless, dazed, silly, foolish, giddy, volatile. From the Gaelic gleog, a silly look; gleogach, silly, stupid; gleogair, a stupid fellow; gleogach, a vain, silly woman.

That frequent pass dounce Wisdom's door
For glaiokit Folly's portals.

—BURNS: Address to the Unco Guid.

Wi' his glaiokit wife, Jeannie Bell.

—The Blithesome Bridal.

Glamour, enchantment, witchcraft, fascination; once supposed to be from the Gaelic glac, to seize, to lay hold of, to fascinate; and mor, great; whence great fascination, or magic not to be resisted. Lord Neaves thought the word was a corruption of grammar, in which magic was once supposed to reside. This word, once peculiar to the Scotch, has within the present century been adopted by English writers both of prose and verse, and has become familiar in the conversation of educated people. It signifies the kind of halo, fascination, and magical charm that a person or thing receives from the imagination; the high and fanciful reputation which the French language expresses by prestige, a word which has also striven to naturalise itself in English. Its etymology has scarcely been attempted by English philologists, some few of whom, however, have discovered, as they think, a kindred origin for it in clamor, from the Latin clamare, to cry out, or make a great noise. It is possible that this idea lies in reality at the root of the poetical word glamour, in its signification of a glorified repute; repute itself being the outward manifestation of the popular belief in the excellence of the person or thing spoken of, and which would not be known unless for the spoken opinion or voice of the multitude, which gives and extends fame and glory. In the Gaelic and British languages, fuaim signifies noise, sound, recalling the classical embodying of Fame as an angel blowing a trumpet, making a loud sound; and glair signifies praise loudly expressed, and therefore glory. In like manner, glamour may resolve itself into the two Gaelic words, glaoth, pronounced glao, a shout, and mor, great, whence glao-mor or glamour, a great or loud cry or shout, attesting the applause and approbation of those who raise it. Stormonth, the latest etymologist who has attempted to explain the word, adopts the etymology that found favour with Jamieson, and derives it from glimmer or glitter, "a false lustre, a charm on the eyes, making them see things different from what they are." This etymology is plausible, and will possibly be accepted by all to whom the Gaelic derivation has not been offered for consideration; but the Gaelic, supported as it is by the primitive but highly philosophic ideas that gave rise to the simple but now grandiose words of "fame" and "glory," merits the attention and study of all students who love to trace words to their origin, and endeavour by their means to sound the depths of human intelligence in the infancy of society and of language.

And one short spell therein he read,
It had much of glamour might,
Could make a lady seem a knight,
The cobweb on a dungeon wall
Seem tapestry in a lordly hall.

—SCOTT: The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

As soon as they saw her weel-faur'd face,
They cast their glamour o'er her.

—Johnnie Faa, the Gipsie Laddie.

Ye gipsy gang that deal in glamour,
And you, deep read in Hell's black grammar,

Warlocks and witches.

—BURNS: On Captain Grose.

This Scottish word has been admitted into some recent English dictionaries. Mr. Wedgwood seems to think it is akin to glimmer. The fascination of the eye is exemplified in Coleridge's Ancient Mariner:—

*He holds him with his glittering eye,
The wedding-guest stood still,
And listens like a three-year child—
The mariner hath his will.*

Glamp, to clutch at, to seize greedily or violently; from the Gaelic glaim, to seize voraciously.

Some glower'd wi' open jaws,
Syne glampt on the vacant air.
GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.
Glampin round, he kent nae whither.

—Ibid.

Glaum, to grasp at, to clutch, to endeavour to seize, without strength to hold; from the Gaelic glam, to devour greedily; glamair, a glutton.

Clans frae wuds in tartan duds,
Wha glauimed at kingdoms three, man.
—BURNS: The Battle of Sheriffmuir.

Gled or glaid, a kite, a hawk, a vulture; etymology uncertain.

And aye as ye gang furth and in,
Keep well the gaislings frae the gled.

He ca'd the gaislings forth to feed,
There was but sevenstone o' them a',
And by them cam' the greedy gled,
And lickit up five—left him but twa.

—The Wife of Auchtermuchty.

The name of Gladstone is derived from gled-stane, the hawk or vulture stone, and synonymous with the German Geir-stein, the title of one of the novels of Sir Walter Scott.

Gleed or gleid, a burning coal, a temporary blaze, a sparkle, a splinter that starts from the fire.

And cheerily blinks the ingle gleed
Of honest Lucky.—BURNS.

Mend up the fire to me, brother,
Mend up the gleed to me;
For I see him coming hard and fast
Will mend it up for thee.

—Ballad of Lady Maisry.

Gleg, sharp, acute, quick-witted; gleg-tongued, voluble; gleg-lugg'd, sharp of hearing; gleg-ee'd, sharp-sighted.

Sae for my part I'm willing to submit
To what your glegger wisdom shall think fit.—ROSS's Helenore.

Unskaithe'd by Death's gleg gullie.

—BURNS: Tam Samson's Livin'.

He'll shape you aff fu' gleg
The cut of Adam's philibeg.

—BURNS: Captain Grose.

Jamieson derives gleg from the Icelandic and Swedish, unaware of the Gaelic etymology from glac, to seize, to snatch, to lay hold of quickly.

Glent, glint, a moment, a glance, a twinkling; also to glance, to shine forth, to peep out. From the same root as the English glance, the Teutonic glänzen, and Flemish glinster.

And in a glent, my child, ye'll find it sae.
—ROSS'S Helenore.

Yet cheerfully thou glinted forth
Amid the storm.

—BURNS: To a Mountain Daisy.

The risin' sun owre Galston muir
Wi' glowing light was glintin'.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Gley, to squint; aglee or agley, crooked, aslant, in the wrong direction; probably from the Gaelic gli, the left hand, awkward.

There's a time to gley and a time to look even.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Gleyed Sandy he came here yestreen,
And speired when I saw Pate.

—JAMES CARNEGIE, 1765.

The best-laid schemes of mice and men
Gang aft aglee.

—BURNS: To a Mouse.

Glib-gabbet, having "the gift of the gab," speaking glibly with voluble ease; apparently derived from the Gaelic glib or gliob, slippery, and gab, a mouth.

And that glib-gabbet Highland baron,
The Laird o' Graham.

—BURNS: Cry and Prayer.

Gliff, a moment, a short slumber, a nap.

I'll win out a gliff the night for a' that,
to dance in the moonlight.—SCOTT: The Heart of Midlothian.

"Laid down on her bed for a gliff," said her grandmother.—SCOTT: The Antiquary.

Gloaming, the twilight; from the English gloom or darkness. This word has been adopted by the best English writers.

When ance life's day draws near its gloaming.

—BURNS: To James Smith.

'Twixt the gloaming and the mirk,

When the kye come hame.

—HOGG, the Eltrick Shepherd.

Glower, to look stupidly or intently, to glare, to stare.

Ye glowered at the moon and fell in the midden.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

I am a bard of no regard,

Wi' gentle folks and a' that;

But Homer-like, the glowrin' byke (swarm) Frae town to town I draw that.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

He only glowered at her, taking no notice whatever of her hints.—A. TROLLOPE: Vicar of Bullhampton.

Glunch, an angry frown, a sulky or forbidding expression of countenance. "To glunch and gloom," to look angry, discontented, sulky, and gloomy. Glunshoch, one who has a frowning or morose countenance; from the Gaelic glonn, a qualm, a feeling of nausea; glonnach, one who has a disagreeable or stupid expression on his face:—

A glunch

O' sour disdain.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Does any great man glunch and gloom?

—BURNS: Cry and Prayer.

Glunch and gloom.—Glunch, giving audible expression to discontent in a series of interjectional humphs; gloom, a frowning, silent expression of displeasure.—R. DRENNAN.

Gomeril, a fool, a loud-talking fool; from the Gaelic geum, to bellow. The English and Cockney slang "Give us none of your gum," i.e., of your impudence or loud bellowing, is from the root of geum.

He's naught but a gomeril, never tired of talking.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Gowan, a daisy; gowany, sprinkled with gowans or daisies. Chaucer was partial to the word daisy, which he derived from "day's eye;" though it is more probably to be traced to the Gaelic deise, pretty, a pretty flower. The word gowan, to a Scottish ear, is far more beautiful.

Where the blue-bell and gowan lurk lowly unseen.—BURNS.

The night was fair, the moon was up,
The wind blew low among the gowans.
—Legends of the Isles.

Her eyes shown bright amid her tears,
Her lips were fresh as gowans growing.
—Idem.

In gowany glens the burnie strays.
—BURNS.

I'd not be buried in the Atlantic wave,
But in brown earth with gowans on my grave,

Fresh gowans gathered on Lochaber's braes.—All the Year Round.

Gowdspink, the goldfinch.

Nancy's to the greenwood gane,
To hear the gowdspink chattering;
And Willie he has followed her,
To win her love by flattering.
—Scornful Nancy.

Gowff or gouff, to pull violently.

She broke the bicker, spilt the drink,
And tightly gouff'd his haffets (long hair).

—HERD'S Collection: The Three-Girred Cog.

Gowk, the cuckoo; also a fool, or a person who has but one idea and is always repeating it; from the Gaelic cuach, with the same meaning.

Ye breed o' the gowk, ye hae never a song but ane.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Conceited gowk, puffed up wi' windy pride.
—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Gowl, to weep loudly, to whine and blubber; from the Gaelic gul, with the same meaning. The French has gueule, a mouth that is very wide open. Gowl also signifies large and empty, as "a gowl or gowsome house," and "a gowl (a hollow) between the hills;" possibly allied in idea to the French gueule.

Ne'er may Misfortune's *gowl*ing bark Howl through the dwelling o' the clerk.
—BURNS: To Gavin Hamilton.

Gowl means to bawl, to howl, but has the additional idea of threatening or terrifying. To gowl at a person is to speak in a loud threatening tone—"He gied me a gowl," "What mak's ye gowl that way at the weans?" I have an idea that this is one of the words that have crept into the Scotch through the French.—R. DRENNAN.

Gowpen, two handfuls; from the Flemish gaps, which has the same meaning.

Those who carried meal seldom failed to add a gowpen to the alms-bag of the deformed cripple.—SCOTT: The Black Dwarf.

Gowpen means placing the two palms together, and the hollow formed thereby is a gowpen. The miller would have had but a scanty "mouter" if his gowpen had been only a handful. An ordinary beggar would get a nievefu' o' meal, but a weel kent ane and a favourite would get a gowpen. Hence, you never heard the crucial test of an Englishman's knowledge of Scotch when he was asked "What's a gowpen o' glaur?" and his acquaintance with the tongue failing him, he was enlightened by the explanation that it was "twa neivefu' o' clairs."—R. DRENNAN.

Gracie, well-behaved, graceful, of pleasant manners and behaviour.

"A wife's ae dochter is never gracie."
—Proverb.

Signifying that an only daughter is likely to be spoiled by over-indulgence, and therefore not likely to be as agreeable in manners as if she had sisters to compete with her for favour.

Gradden, the coarse meal that is ground in the quern by hand.

Grind the gradden, grind it;
We'll a' get crowdie when it's done,
An' bannocks steeve to bind it.

Whisky gars the bark of life
Drive merrily and rarely,
But gradden is the ballast gars
It steady gang and fairly.

—R. JAMIESON: The Queen Lily.

Graith, tools, requisites, implements, appurtenances of a business or work, harness; graitthing-clothes, accoutrements.

Then he in wrath put up his graitth—
"The devil's in the hizzie."

—Jacob and Rachel: attributed to BURNS, 1825.

And ploughmen gather wi' their graitth.
—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Ye'll bid her shoe her steed before
An' a gowd graitthing was behind.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

Gramarye, magic; French grimoire, a magic-book. Attempts have been made to derive this word from grammar. It is more likely, considering the gloomy ideas attached to the French grimoire (the immediate root of the word), that it comes originally from the Gaelic gruaim, gloom, melancholy, wrath, intense sadness or indignation; and gruamach, sullen, surly, morose, gloomy, grim, frowning.

Whate'er he did of gramarye,
Was always done maliciously.

—SCOTT: Lay of the Last Minstrel.

The wild yell and visage strange,
And the dark woods of gramarye,

—Idem.

Grandgore, sometimes written glengore and glandgore, the venereal disease. Jamieson suggests its origin from the French grand, great, and gorre; but does not explain the meaning of gorre, which does not appear in French dictionaries.

The word appears to be rightly grandgore, and not glen or glandgore, and to be derived from the Gaelic grain, horrid, disgusting, and gaorr, filth.

Gree, to bear the gree, to excel, to be acknowledged to excel. The origin of this phrase is uncertain, though supposed to be connected with degree, i.e., a degree of excellence and superiority.

Then let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that,
That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth,
Shall bear the gree and a' that.

—BURNS.

I wad hae nane o' them, though they wad
fancy me,
For my bonnie mason laddie he bears
awa' the gree.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs: The Mason Laddie.

Greetie, the affectionate diminutive of greet, to weep or cry; not to be rendered into English except by a weak paraphrase and dilution of the touching Scottish phrase, such as a small, faint, or little cry or lament. The same remark applies to the diminutive of feet in the subjoined verse.

We'll hap an' row, we'll hap an' row,
We'll hap an' row the feetie o't;
It is a wee bit wearie thing,
I downa bide the greetie o't.

—WILLIAM CREECH, Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and publisher of the Poems of Robert Burns.

Gregorian, a popular name for a wig in the seventeenth century, introduced into England by the Scottish followers of James VI. when he succeeded to the English throne. Blount, in his "Glossographia," says: "Wigs were so called from one Gregorie, a barber in the Strand, who was a famous perruque-maker."

He cannot be a cuckold that wears a gregorian, for a periwig will never fit such a head.—NARES.

Yet, though one Gregorie, a wig-maker, may have lived and flourished in London in the early part of the seventeenth century, it does not follow that the word gregorian was derived from his name, any more than that of the designation of a tailor by trade had its origin in the patronymic of taylor. At all events, it is worthy of note that in Gaelic gruaig signifies a wig; gruagach, hairy; gruagag, a little wig, or a bunch of hair; and gruagair, a wig-maker and hairdresser.

Grien or grene, to covet, to long for, to desire ardently and unreasonably; grening, longing, akin to the English yearn, "a yearning desire," German gern, Flemish gearne, willingly, desirous of. From this comes probably "green sickness," a malady that afflicts growing girls when they long for unwholesome and unnatural food, and would eat chalk, charcoal, unripe fruit, and any kind of trash. The medical name of this malady is chlorosis, a Greek translation of "green sickness," arising from the fact that English physicians understood the popular word green, the colour, but not grien or grene, to covet, which is the main symptom of the disease.

Teuch Johnnie, staunch Geordie an' Walie,
That griens for the fishes an' loaves,

—BURNS: The Election.

They came there justice for to gett,
They'll never grene to come again.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Raid of the Redswire.

Grip, tenacity, moral or physical ;
to hold fast.

Will Shore couldna conceive how it was that when he was drunk his feet wadna haud the grip.—Laird of Logan.

But where you feel your honour grip,
Let that be aye your border.

—BURNS : Epistle to a Young Friend.

I like the Scotch ; they have more grip
than any people I know.—SAM SLICK.

Grog, a mixture of spirits and water ; usually applied to hot gin and water, as distinguished from rum-punch and whisky-toddy. The word is now common in England, and is supposed by careless philologists, who follow blindly where their predecessors lead them, to have been first used by the sailors in a ship of war commanded by Captain, afterwards Admiral Vernon, commonly called "Old Grog," from the grogram jacket or coat which he usually wore. But grog was known and named long before the days of Admiral Vernon, and was in common use in Scotland, as well as in England, as croc, afterwards corrupted into grog. The word croc in Gaelic signifies a horn, used in districts and in houses where glass was too expensive for purchase. A horn or croc of liquor was synonymous with a glass of liquor, and to offer a guest a croc or grog of spirit of any kind was the same as to invite him to take a social glass ; and in time croc came to signify the liquor in the horn, as well as the horn itself. To invite a man to take a friendly glass is not to invite him to take the glass itself, but the drink that is in it. Hence the word grog, which has no more connection with the grogram suit of Admiral Vernon than it has with "the man in the moon." The French have the phrase "cric et croc" in the slang vernacular.

Groof, the belly, so called from its rumbling when deprived of food ; from the Gaelic gromhan (grovan), to growl.

Rowin' yoursel' on the floor on your groof, wi' your hair on end and your e'en on fire.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Grue or grew, a greyhound.

I dreamed a weary dream yestre'en,
I wish it may come to gude ;
I dreamed that ye slew my best grew- hound,
And gied me his lapper'd blude.

—Ballad of Sir Roland.

What has come ower ye, Muirland Tam ?
Your leg's now grown like a wheelbarrow
tram ;

Ye'd the strength o' a stot, the weight o' a cow,

Now, Tammy, my man, ye have grown like a grew.

—HEW AINSLIE : Tam o' the Balloch.

A grew is a female greyhound in the South of England, according to Mr. Halliwell Phillips, while in the eastern counties the word is a grewin, and in Shropshire groun. In old French grous signifies any kind of hunting-dog—a greyhound among the rest.

The modern French do not call the animal a "chien gris," but a limier, which means a dog which leaps or springs, from the Celtic leum, to leap, or a levrier, because it courses the lièvre or hare. In "Anglo-Saxon," which is merely Teutonic with a large substratum of Gaelic, it appears that this word is grig-hound. The pure Teutonic calls it a windel spiel, a grotesque term, for which it is difficult to account. The Dutch and Flemish call it a speurhond, or tracking-hound. The Italians call the animal a véltro. It is evident from all these examples that the dog was not named from grey, which is not its invariable colour. Grey is not adopted as its designation by any other nation than the English. Philology is thus justified in seeking elsewhere for the root of grue, which the Teutonic nations do not afford. The old grammarian Minshew thought he had found it in græcus, and that the hound was so called because the Greeks hunted with it; but this derivation is manifestly inadmissible, as is that from grip, the hound which grips or snatches. Possibly the Scottish hound came from the Highlands and not from the Lowlands, or may be derived from gaoth, wind or breath, and gaothar (pronounced gao-ar), long-winded, strong-winded, provided with wind for rapid motion. Gaothar is rendered in the Gaelic dictionaries as a lurcher, half foxhound and half greyhound, and anciently as greyhound only. As gaor is easy of corruption, first into grao, and afterwards into grew or grue, it is extremely probable that this is the true derivation of a word that has long been the despair of all lexicographers who were not so confident as Minshew and Dr. Johnson.

Gruesome, highly ill-favoured, disagreeable, horrible, cruel. Grue, to shudder, to be horrified. From the Teutonic grau, horror; grausam, horrible, cruel; and grausamkeit, cruelty. This word has been recently used by some of the best English writers, though not yet admitted to the honours of the dictionaries.

Ae day as Death, that gruesome carle,
Was driving to the ither warl (world).

—BURNS: Verses to J. Rankine.

And now, let us change the discourse.
These stories make one's very blood grew.
—SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel.

"They're the Hieland hills," said the Baillie; "ye'll see and hear eneuch about them before ye see Glasgow Green again. I downa look at them, I never see them, but they gar me grew."—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Grugous or allagrugous, grim, ghastly, disagreeable, morose, ill-natured; from the Gaelic grug, morose, ill-conditioned and surly, and uille, all.

Whilk added horror to his mien,
A grugous sight he was, I ween.

—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Ardh.

An allagrugous, gruesome spectre,
A' gored and bored like Trojan Hector.
—Ibid.

Gruntle, a word of contempt for a snub nose or snout; erroneously rendered by "countenance" in some of the glossaries to Burns; gruntle-thrawn, crooked in the nose.

May goats torment him, inch by inch,
Wha twists his gruntle wi' a glunch
O' sour disdain,
Out owre a glass o' whisky-punch
Wi' honest men.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Akin to the Gaelic graineil, ugly, loathsome; graineilachd, ugliness.

Grunzie, a ludicrous name for the nose or mouth; possibly applied originally to the snout of a hog, in reference to the grunting of the animal. (See GRUNTLE.)

But Willie's wife is nae sae trig,

She dights her grunzie wi' a hushon
(i.e., she wipes her nose with a cushion).

—BURNS: Sic a Wife as Willie had.

Grushie, of rapid growth, thickly sown.

The dearest comfort o' their lives,
Their grushie weans and faithful wives.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Gryce, a young pig.

A yeld (barren) sow was ne'er good to gryces. —ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

My bairn has tocher o' her ain,
Although her friends do nane her len',
A stirk, a staig, an acre sawn,
A goose, a gryce, a clocking-hen.

—The Wooing o' Jenny and Jock.

Gryme, to sprinkle; gryming, a sprinkling. The English word grimy signifies foul with dirt. The Scottish gryme has a wider meaning, and is applied both to pure and impure substances when out of place.

The sun wasna up, but the moon was down,

It was the griming of new fa'n snaw.

—Border Minstrelsy: Jamie Telfer.

Guller, an indistinct noise in the throat. (See GOWL.)

Between a grunt, a groan, and a guller
—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Gullie or gully (sometimes written goolie), a large pocket-knife; gullie-gaw, a broil in which knives are likely to be drawn and used. Gullie-willie, according to Jamieson, is a noisy, blustering fool—possibly from his threatening the knife, but not using it.

I rede ye weel, tak' care o' skaith—

See, there's a gullie. —BURNS.

The carles of Kilmarnock had spits and had spears,

And lang-hafted gullies to kill Cavaliers.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Bonnie Dundee.

Stickin' gangs nae by strength, but by right guidin' o' the gully. —ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

"To guide the gullie," is a proverbial phrase, signifying to have the management of an affair. The derivation is uncertain, but is perhaps from the Gaelic guallich, to go hand in hand, to accompany; applied to the weapon from its ready convenience to the hand in case of need.

Gumlie, muddy, turbid, synonymous with drumlie (q.v.). Etymology obscure.

O ye wha leave the springs o' Calvin,
For gumlie dubs [pools] o' your ain delvin'.

—BURNS: To Gavin Hamilton.

Gump, a stupid old woman, of the kind so well portrayed in the Mrs. Gamp of Dickens, and which possibly may have suggested the name to the brilliant novelist, who married a Scots-woman, the grand-daughter of George Thompson, the celebrated correspondent of Robert Burns.

Gumphia, a fool; gommeril, a foolish or stupid person; gomf or gomph, an idiot. The root is possibly the Gaelic geum, to low or bellow like a cow or a bull, and which finds its equivalent in the English slang, "Give us none of your gum."

Gump not only signifies an old woman not over-wise, but a fat and chubby infant, so that the Gaelic etymology for geum, if correct, can only be accepted in the case of the child, on the supposition that the child is a noisy one, and bellows or lows in expression of its wants or its ill-temper. To take the gumps is to indulge in a fit of ill-temper. Jamieson defines gomeril or gomrell as a stupid fellow, so called, he intimates, from the French goimpre, "one who minds nothing but his belly." The word, however, is not to be found in the "Dictionnaire Etymologique" of Noel and Carpentier (1857), nor in the comprehensive dictionary of "argot," or French slang, by the erudite and industrious Professor Barrère, published in 1887, nor in that of M. Brachet, published by the Clarendon Press in 1882, or in the voluminous work of M. Littré, the last recognised exponent of the French language. Professor Barrère, however, has goimfre—slang of thieves—from a pie-eater, "an allusion to his opening his mouth like a glutton," which may possibly be the word which Jamieson adopts as goimfre. But neither goimfre nor goimfre throws any light upon gump or the closely-related words that spring out of it, unless it be in support of the Gaelic derivation from geum, to low or bellow, and consequently to open the mouth widely.

Gumption, wit, sense, knowledge.

This word is akin to the Gaelic cuimse (cumshe), moderation, adaptation, and cuimsichte, well-aimed, that hits the mark.

Nor a' the quacks with all their gumption
Will ever mend her.

—BURNS: Letter to John Goudie.

Gurl, to growl; gurly, boisterous, stormy, savage, growly; from the German and Flemish grollen, the English growl, to express displeasure or anger by murmurs, and low, inarticulate sounds.

The lift grew dark and the wind blew sair,
And gurly grew the sea.

—Sir Patrick Spens.

Waesome wailed the snow-white sprites,
Upon the gurly sea.

—LAIDLAW: The Demon Lover.

There's a strong gurly blast blowing snell frae the south.—JAMES BALLANTINE: The Spunk Splitters.

Gurr, to snarl, to growl like an angry dog; gurrie, a loud and angry disputation, and also the growling, yelping, and barking of dogs in a fight. Allied in meaning and derivation, though spelled with i instead of u, are girn, peevish; girnigoe and girnigoe-gibbie, a snarling and ill-natured person; and girn' gyte, a fractious child.

Gurthie, corpulent, obese, large round the waist or girth.

Applied especially to what burdens the stomach. Roquefort renders it pesant, ponderous, burdensome.—JAMIESON.

Gutcher, a grandfather. This ungainly word seems to be a corruption of gude-sire, gude-sir, gudsir, or good sir, a title of reverence for a grandfather.

God bless auld lang syne, when our gutchers ate their trenchers.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

This was a reproach directed against over-dainty people who objected to their food.

Gae 'wa wi' your plaidie, auld Donald,
gae 'wa;

I fear na the cauld blast, the drift, nor the sna',

Gae 'wa wi' your plaidie—I'll no sit beside ye;

Ye might be my gutcher! auld Donald,
gae 'wa!

—HECTOR MACNEIL: Come under my Plaidie.

The derivation from good-sire is rendered the more probable by the common use of the word good in Scotland to express degrees of relationship, as good-mother, a mother-in-law; good-brother, a brother-in-law; good-sister, a sister-in-law; good-son, a son-in-law, &c., as also in the familiarly affectionate phrases of good-wife for wife, and good- man for husband. The French use beau or belle in a similar sense, as beau-père, a father-in-law; belle-fille, a daughter-in-law; belle-mère, a mother-in-law. Possibly the English words god-father and god-mother, applied to the sponsors at the baptism of a child, were originally good, and not god.

Gyre - carline. This is in some parts of Scotland the name given to a woman suspected of witchcraft, and is from gyre, the Teutonic geier, a vulture, and carline, an old woman. The harpies in Grecian mythology are represented as having the beaks and claws of vultures, and are fabled to devour the bodies of warriors left unburied on the battle-field. The name of "Harpy," given in the ancient mythology to these supposed malevolent creatures, has been conclusively shown to be derived from the Gaelic, and to be traceable to ar, a battle-field, and *pi*ghe (pronounced pee), a bird, whence *ar pi*ghe, a harpy, the bird of the battlefield, the great carrion hawk or vulture.

I wad like ill to see a secret house haunted wi' ghaists and gyre-carlines.—
SCOTT: The Monastery.

Gyte, deranged, mad; from the Flemish guut, mischievous, roguish; guitenstuk, a piece of mischief.

Surprised at once out of decorum, philosophy, and phlegm, he skimmed his cocked-hat in the air. "Lord sake," said Edie, "he's gaun gyte."—SCOTT: The Anti-quary.

H

Hadden and dung, a phrase that signifies "held down and beaten," i.e., held in bondage and ill-used; from hadden, preterite of hold, and dung, the preterite of ding, to beat or strike. (See DING.)

Haddin, furniture, plenishment, household stuff.

Oh, Sandie has owsen an' siller an' kye,
A house an' a haddin, an' a' things forbye;
But I'd rather ha'e Jamie wi' s bonnet in hand,
Than I wad ha'e Sandie wi' houses an' land.
—Logie o' Buchan.

Haet, a whit, an iota; deil a haet, the devil a bit.

But gentlemen, an' ladies warst,
Wi' evendoun want o' wark are curst;
They loiter, lounging, lank and lazy,
Though de'il haet ails them, yet uneasy.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

In Bartlett's "Dictionary of Americanisms" the word occurs as hate.

I don't care a hate—I didn't eat a hate.

Haffets or haffits, the long hair of men, also applied to the long hair of women when old, but never when they are young.

Jamieson says that haffits means the cheeks, but as used by Burns in "The Cotter's Saturday Night" it clearly signifies the front hair on the venerable cotter—"His lyart haffits wearin' thin an' bare." His lyart (grey) haffits are evidently not meant for grey cheeks, and cheeks, though they may grow thin, do not necessarily grow bare. The etymology of haffits as long hair is unknown; but supposing it to be cheeks, Jamieson derives it from the Anglo-Saxon healf heafod, half head, a semi-cranium.

His lyart haffits wearin' thin an' bare.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Lyart signifies grey, from the Gaelic liath, grey, and liathach, grey-headed.

Haffins, almost or nearly one-half, formed from half and lins, pertaining to or approaching towards half, as in avblins (which see).

While Jeanie haffins is afraid to speak,
Weel pleased the mother hears he's nae wild worthless rake.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

When it's cardit, row'd and spun,
Then the work is haffins done.

—Tea-Table Miscellany: Tarry Woo.

Haggis, the national dish par excellence of Scotland, which shares with cock-a-leekie and hotch-potch the particular favour of Scotsmen all over the world. Sir Walter Scott describes it in the introduction to "Johnnie Armstrong," in the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," as "an olio composed of the liver, head, &c., of a sheep, minced down with oatmeal, onions, and spices, and boiled in the stomach of the animal by way of bag." In Tim Bobbin's Glossary hag and haggus are defined as meaning the belly.

Fair fa' your honest, sonsie face,
Great chieftain o' the puddin' race;
Aboon them a' you tak' your place,
Painch, tripe, or thairm;
Weel are ye worthy o' a grace
As lang's my arm.

—BURNS: To a Haggis.

Even a haggis, God bless her! could charge down the hill.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

An illustrious American, travelling in Scotland, was entertained at a public dinner, when towards the end of the repast a very large haggis was brought in on a gigantic dish, carried by four waiters, to the tune of "See the Conquering Hero Comes," played by the band. He was very much amused at the incident, and having heard much of the national dish, but never having tasted it, was easily induced to partake of it. He did not appear to like its flavour very much, and being asked his opinion of it, replied that "the haggis must have been invented to give Scotsmen an excuse for a dram of whisky after it, to take the taste out of the mouth," adding, "But if I were a Scotsman, I should make it a patriotic duty to love it, with or without the dram—but especially with it!" —C. M.

The word, formerly spelled haggass, is usually derived from the French hachis, a hash of viands cut into small pieces, from hacher, to mince, the English hack, to cut. The dish is quite unknown to the French, though the etymology is possibly correct. The allusion of Burns to the "sonsie face" of the pudding which he praised so highly, renders it possible that he knew the Gaelic words aogas, a face, and aogasach, seemly, comely, sonsie. Anyhow, the coincidence is curious.

Haimert, homely, home-like, or tending homewards, of which latter word it is a variety or corruption.

Quoth John, They're late; but, by jingo,
Ye'se get the rest in haimert lingo.

—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Hain, to preserve, to economise, so as to prevent waste and extravagance; to protect with a hedge or fence; to spare for future use. Hain seems to be derived from the German hagen, to enclose with a hedge or fence; the Danish hegne, with the same meaning; and the Dutch and Flemish heenen; omheenen, to fence around, and onheining, an enclosure. From the practical idea of enclosing anything to protect it came the metaphorical use of this word in Scotland, in the sense of preservation of a thing by means of care, economy, and frugality.

The weel-hained kebbock (cheese).

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Wha waste your weel-hained gear on damned new brigs and harbours.

—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Kail hains bread.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S
Scots Proverbs.

We've won to crazy years thegither,
We'll toyte about wi' ane anither;
Wi' tentie care I'll slit thy tether
To some hain'd rig.

—BURNS: The Auld Farmer.

Hain, to preserve, does not seem to me to be a correct synonym; the word rather means to use economically. "Her wheel hain'd kebbuck" does not mean that the cheese had been preserved from danger, from mites, or the cheese-fly and maggots, but that it had not been used wastefully; haining clothes, means a second goodish suit to save your best one. The English expression "eke it out" comes very near the meaning of hain. In Fifeshire the word used instead of hain is tape—tape it, make it last a good while, don't gobble up a nice thing all at once; in fact, hain it.—R. DRENNAN.

Haiver, to talk in a desultory manner, foolishly, or idly, to drive.

Wi' clavers and haivers Wearin' the day awa'.

—BURNS.

Haiver or haver seems to be a corruption of the Gaelic abair, to talk, to say.

Hale-scart, without scratch or damage; from scart, to scratch, and hale, well or intact.

Hale-scart frae the wars without skaithing,

Gaed bannin' the French awa' hame.

—ANDREW SCOTT: Symon and Janet.

Hallan-shaker, a sturdy, importunate beggar. Jamieson derives the word from hallan, a partition in a cottage between the "but" and the "ben;" and shaker, one who shakes the hallan by the noise he makes. If he had sought in the Gaelic, he might have found a better derivation in alla, allan, allanta, wild, ferocious, savage; and seachran (the Irish shaughraun), a vagrant, a wanderer, a beggar.

Right scornfully she answered him,
Begone, you hallan-shaker!
Jog on your gate, you bladderskate,
My name is Maggie Lauder.

—FRANCIS SEMPLE.

Hantle, a good deal, a quantity; from the Flemish hand, a hand, and tel, to count or number; a quantity that may be reckoned by the handful.

A Scottish clergyman related as his experience after killing his first pig, that "nae doot there was a hantle o' miscellaneous eating about a swine."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Some ha'e a hantle o' fauts; ye are only a ne'er-do-weel.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Are we better now than before? In a few things better; in a hantle waur.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Hap, to cover, to wrap up.

I digged a grave and laid him in,
And happ'd him wi' the sod sae green.
—Lament of the Border Widow.

Hap and rowe, hap and rowe the feetie o't,
It is a wee bit ourie thing,
I downa bide the greetie o't.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

Happer, thin, lank, shrunken; happer-lipped, having thin lips; happer-hipped, having small or shrunken hips.

An' there'll be happer-hipped Nannie,
An' fairy-faced Flora by name;
Muck Maudie, and fat-luggit Girzie,
The lass wi' the gowden wame.

—The Blithesome Bridal.

Harns, brains; from the German hirn or gehirn, the brain; hirn-schale, the brain-pan; Dutch and Flemish, hersens.

A wheen midden-cocks pike ilk others' harns out (a lot of dunghill cocks pick each others' brains out).—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Lastly, Bailie, because if I saw a sign o' your betraying me, I would plaster that wa' wi' your harns, ere the hand o' man could rescue ye.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Hatter (sometimes written hotter) signifies, according to Jamieson, to bubble, to boil up and also a crowd in motion or in confusion. The English slang expression "Mad as a hatter" does not apply—though commonly supposed to do so—to a hat-maker, any more than it does to a tailor or a shoemaker. It seems to have been borrowed by the Lowland Scotch from the Gaelic at, to swell like boiling water, and atairachd, the swelling and foaming of waters as in a cataract, and, by extension of the image, to the tumultuous action of a noisy crowd. In Tim Bobbin's Lancashire Glossary hotter signifies to vex, and hottering, mad, very mad, very vexed.

Haugh, low ground or meadows by the river-side; from the Gaelic ae, ach, and auch; the Teutonic awe, a meadow. Holm and hagg have the same meaning. The word aere is from the same etymological root.

By Leader haughs and Yarrow.

Let husky wheat the haughs adorn,
And aits set up their awnie horn.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Haur, an easterly wind; and hoar, frost produced by an easterly wind.

The sleet and the haur—misty, easterly haur.—NOTES AMBROSIANA.

Hause-bane, the neck-bone; from the Flemish and German hals, the neck.

Ye shall sit on his white hause-bane,
And I'll pike out his bonny blue een;
Wi' ae lock o' his yellow hair
We'll theek our nest when it grows bare.

—THE TWA CORBIES.

To hause or hals signifies to embrace, i.e., to put the arms round the neck.

Haveril, a half-witted person, a silly talker; from haiver, to talk nonsense; the Gaelic abair, to talk.

Poor haveril Will fell aff the drift,
And wandered through the bow-kail,
And pu'd, for want o' better shift,
A runt was like a sow-tail.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Havers, oats; haver-meal, oat-meal; from the French avoine.

Oh, where did ye get that haver-meal
bannock?

Oh, silly auld body, dinna ye see?

I got it frae a sodger laddie

Betwixt St. Johnstoun and Bonnie Dundee.

—HERD'S Collection: altered and amended by BURNS.

Havins, good manners and behaviour, courteous and kindly demeanour, personal accomplishments which one has; thence havings or acquirements.

Awa, ye selfish warldly race,
Wha think that havins, sense, and grace,
E'en love and friendship, should give place
To catch-the-plack (the money);
I dinna like to see your face
Or hear you crack (talk).

—BURNS: Epistle to Lapraik.

Hawkie, a pet name for a favourite cow or one who is a good milker.

Dawtit twal-pint Hawkie's gaen
As yell's the bull.

—BURNS: Address to the De'il.

I'd rather sell my petticoat,
Though it were made o' silk,
Than sell my bonnie broun Hawkie,
That gies the sup o' milk.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

"Brown hawkie," says Jamie-son, "is a cant name for a barrel of ale"—i.e., the milk of drunkards' and toppers. The word is traceable to the Gaelic adhach (pronounced awk or hawk), lucky, fortunate.

Heartsome, cordial, hearty; full of heartiness.

Farewell to Lochaber, farewell to my Jean,
Where heartsome wi' her I ha'e mony a day been.—Lochaber no More.

Hech, an exclamation of surprise, of joy, or of pain; softened from the Gaelic oich. On the shore of Loch Ness, near the waterfall of Abriachan, where the road is steep and difficult, the rock near the summit of the ascent has received from the shepherds and drovers the name of "Craig Oich," from their stopping to draw breath and exclaiming, "Oich! oich!" (in the Lowland Scottish, hech). The English heigho is a kindred exclamation, and is possibly of the same etymology. Hech-howe signifies heigh-ho! "In the auld hech-howe," i.e., as in the old heigho condition, a mode of complaining that one is in the customary state of ill-health.

Hecht, to offer, to promise. This verb seems to have no present tense, no future, and no declensions or inflexions, and to be only used in the past, as:—

Willie's rare, Willie's fair,
And Willie's wondrous bonny,]
And Willie hecht to marry me,
Gin e'er he married ony.

—Tea-Table Miscellany.

The miller he hecht her a heart leal and loving,

The laird did address her wi' matter mair moving.—BURNS: Meg o' the Mill.

He hecht me baith rings and mony braw things,

And were na my heart light I wad die.

—LADY GRIZZEL BAILLIE.

The word is of doubtful etymology: perhaps from the Teutonic echt, sincere, true, genuine—which a promise ought to be.

Heckle, a sort of rough comb used by hemp and flax dressers. Metaphorically the word signifies to worry a person by cross-questioning or impertinence. To heckle a parliamentary candidate at election time is a favourite amusement of voters, who think themselves much wiser than any candidate can possibly be; and of insolent barristers in a court of law, who cross-examine a hostile witness with undue severity—an operation which is sometimes called "badgering." There was a well-known butcher in Tiverton who always made it a point to heckle the late Lord

Palmerston when he stood as candidate for that borough.
Lord Palmerston bore the infliction with great good-humour, and always vanquished the impudent butcher in the wordy warfare.

Adown my beard the slavers trickle,
I throw the wee stools o'er the mickle,
As round the fire the gieglets keckle

To see me loup;

While raving mad I wish a heckle

Were in their doop!

—BURNS: Address to the Toothache.

He was a hedge unto his friends,

A heckle to his foes, lads,

And every one that did him wrang,

He took him by the nose, lads.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Ballads:

Rob Roy.

This was the son of the famous Rob Roy, and was called Robin Og. Chambers translates Robin Og, "Robin the Little."
Og, in Gaelic, signifies not little,
but young.

Heership, plunder; from herry or harry, to rob, to pillage.

But wi' some hope he travels on while he
The way the heership had been driven could see.—ROSS'S Helenore.

Heft, the haft or handle of a knife. The heft of a sword is called the hilt. To give a thing "heft and blade," is to give it wholly and without restriction, "stock, lock, and barrel."

A knife, a father's throat had mangled,
Whom his ain son o' life bereft—
The grey hairs yet stuck to the heft;
Wi' mair o' horrible and awfu',
Which e'en to name would be unlawfu'.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Hein-shinn'd, having large ankles.

Ain or an, the augmentative prefix in Gaelic to nouns and adjectives, signifying size, or excess, is probably the root of hein in this word.

She's bough-houghed and hein-shinn'd.

—BURNS.

Her nain sel', "his own self," and "my own self." This phrase is supposed by the Lowland Scotch to be the usual mode of expression employed by the Highlanders, on account of the paucity of pronouns in the Gaelic language.

Oh, fie for shame, ye're three for ane,
Her nain sel's won the day, man.

—Battle of Killiecrankie.

Mr. Robert Chambers, in a note on this passage, says: "The Highlanders have only one pronoun, and as it happens to resemble the English word her, it has caused the Lowlanders to have a general impression that they mistake the masculine for the feminine gender." Mr.
Chambers, knowing nothing of Gaelic, was utterly wrong in this matter of the pronouns.
The Gaelic has the same number of personal pronouns as the English, namely—mi, I; do, thou; e, he; i, she; sinn, we;
sibh, you or yours; iad, they or theirs. They have also the possessive pronouns—mo, mine; ar, ours; dhur and ur, yours; and all the rest of the series. It was doubtless the ur or the ar of the Gaelic which, by its resemblance to her, suggested to Mr. Chambers the error into which he fell.

Herryment, plague, devastation, ruin; from herry or harry, to plunder and lay waste.

The herryment and ruin of the country.
—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Heuchs and haughs, hands, legs, or thigh. Heuchs is probably a corruption of hooks, as applied to the hands, or, as Shakespeare calls them, "pickers and stealers." Haughs is the Scottish form of the English hocks, the hind part of the knee.

The kelpie grinned an eldrich laugh,
And rubbed his heuchs upon his haughs.
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha.

Hiddil, a hiding-place, the hole or refuge of a shy or wild animal.

The otter yap his prey let drap,
And to his hiddil flew.
—WATER KELPIE: Border Minstrelsy.

Hinnie or honey, a term of endearment among the Scottish Highlanders, and more particularly among the Irish.

Oh, open the door, my hinnie, my heart,
Oh, open the door, my ain true love.
—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs:
Legend of the Pailda.

Honey, in the sense of hinnie, occurs in the nursery-rhymes of England:—

There was a lady loved a swine;
"Honey! my dear," quoth she,
"My darling pig, wilt thou be mine?"
"Hoogh, hoogh!" grunted he.

The word hinnie is supposed to be a corruption of honey, though honey in the English may be a corruption of hinnie. They both express the idea of fondness; and those who believe honey to be the correct term explain it by assuming that the beloved object is as "sweet as honey." But if this be really the fundamental idea, the Gaelic-speaking population of Ireland and the Highlands might be supposed to have used the native word mil, rather than the Teutonic honey or honig, which does not exist in their language. However this may be, it is at all events suggestive that the Gaelic ion signifies fitting; and the compound ion-amhuil means like, equal, well-matched; and ion-mhuin, dear, beloved, kind, loving. The Irish Gaelic has ionadh (pronounced hinna), admiration, or an object of admiration; whence ionadh-rhuigte, adorable. The Scotch and old English marrow is a term of endearment to a lover, and signifies mate, one of a pair, as in the ballad:—

Busk ye, busk ye! my bonnie bride,
Busk ye, busk ye! my winsome marrow.
—HAMILTON of Bangour.

In Scotland hinnie and joe (Jamieson) signify a lass and her lover who are very fond of each other. This phrase is equivalent to the English "Darby and Joan," and describes a greatly-attached wedded pair. The opinions of philologists will doubtless differ between the Teutonic and the possible Gaelic derivation of honey or hinnie; but the fact that the Teutonic nations do not draw the similar expression of fondness, as applied to a woman, from honey, is worthy of consideration in attempting to decide the doubtful point.

Hirple, to limp, to run with a limping motion.

The hares were hirplin' down the furs.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

And when wi' age we're worn down,
An' hirplin' at the door.

—The Boatie Rows.

I'm a pair silly auld man,
An' hirplin' at the door.

—Gin Kirk wad Let me be.

Hirsel, a flock, a multitude; derived by Jamieson from the Teutonic heer, an army; but more probably from the Gaelic earras, wealth (in flocks and herds), and earrasail, wealthy. Hirsel, among shepherds, means to arrange or dispose the sheep in separate flocks, and hirseling, the separating into flocks or herds; sometimes written and pronounced hissel.

Ae scabbed sheep will smit the hale hirsel. —ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

"Jock, man," said he, "ye're just telling a hirsel o' e'endown [downright] lies."
—HOGG: Brownie of Bodbeck.

The herds and hissels were alarmed.

—BURNS: Epistle to W. Simpson.

Hirsel or hersel. The primary idea of this word is to remove the body, when in a sitting position, to another or contiguous seat without absolutely rising. Jamieson suggests the derivation from the coarse word applied to the posteriors in all the Teutonic languages, including English. He is probably correct; though, as a verb, aerselen, which he cites, is not to be found in the Swedish, Danish, Dutch, Flemish, or German dictionaries.

An English gentleman once boasted to the Duchess of Gordon of his familiarity with the Scottish language. "Hirsel yont, my braw birkie," said she. To her great amusement, as well as triumph, he could not understand one word except "my." —DEAN RAMSAY.

Hizzie, a lass, a huzzy; a term of jocular endearment. Supposed to be a corruption of housewife.

Buirly chieles and clever hissies
Are bred in sic a way as this is.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Hoast, a cough, or to cough.

Jamie Fraser, a poor half-witted person, who was accustomed to make inconvenient or unseemly noises in the kirk, was one day cautioned not to make fidgety movements during divine service, under the penalty of being turned out. The poor creature sat quite still and silent, till in a very important part of the sermon he felt an irresistible inclination to cough. Unable to restrain himself, he rose in his seat, and shouted out, "Minister, may not a pair body like me gie a hoast?" —DEAN RAMSAY.

Hodden-grey. In the glossary to the first edition of Allan Ramsay's "Tea-Table Miscellany," 1724, "hodden" is described as a coarse cloth. Hodden appears to be a corruption of the Gaelic adhan, warm; so that hadden-grey would signify warm grey. It was usually home-made by the Scottish peasantry of the Lowlands, and formed the material of their working-day clothes.

What though on homely fare we dine,

Wear hadden-grey, and a' that;

Gi'e fools their silks an' knaves their wine,
A man's a man for a' that.—BURNS.

If a man did his best to murder me, I should not rest comfortably until I knew that he was safe in a well-ventilated cell, with the hadden-grey garment of the gaol upon him.—Trial of Prince Pierre Bonaparte, Daily Telegraph, March 26, 1870.

Hogmanay or Hogmenay. This is a peculiarly Scottish name for a festival by no means peculiar to Scotland—that of New Year's Day, or the last hours of the old year and the first of the new. On these occasions, before the world grew as prosaic as it is with regard to old customs and observances, the young men, and sometimes the old, paid visits of congratulation to the girls and women of their acquaintance, with words of goodwill or affection, and very commonly bore with them gifts of more or less value according to their means. It was a time of good-fellowship, conviviality, and kindly offices. Many attempts have been made to trace the word. Some have held it to be from the Greek hagia (αγια), holy, and μηνες, a month. But as the festival lasted for a few hours only, the etymology is unsatisfactory. Others have thought to find its source in the French gui, the mistletoe, and mener, to lead—au gui mener, to lead to the mistletoe; and others, again, to the Gaelic oige, youth; and madhuin, the morning, because the celebration took place in the earliest hours of the daylight. It cannot be admitted that any one of these derivations is wholly satisfactory. Nobody has ever thought of looking to the Flemish—which has supplied so many words to the vocabulary of the Lowland Scotch—for a solution of the difficulty. In that language we find hoog, high or great; min, love, affection, and dag, a day—hoog-min-dag, the high or great day of affection. The transition from hoog-min-dag to hog-man-ay, with the corruption of dag into ay, is easily accomplished. This etymology is offered with diffidence, not with dogmatic assertion, and solely with this plea on its behalf—that it meets the meaning better perhaps than any other, or, if not better, at least as well as the Greek, French, or Gaelic.

Holme, holm, sometimes written houm, a meadow.

Doun in a glen he spied nine armed men,
On the dowie holms o' Yarrow.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow.

Hoodock, the hooded owl.

The harpy, hoodock, purse-proud race
Wha count a' poortith as disgrace,
They've tuneless hearts.

—BURNS: Epistle to Major Logan.

The glossaries to Burns explain this word as meaning "miserly," which is a mere conjecture from the context, to fit it into "purse-proud;" whereas it is but a continuation of the ornithological idea of harpy, a vulture. The origin is the French duc, an owl, of which in that language there are three varieties—grand duc, or great owl; petit duc, or little owl; and haut duc, large, great owl. Possibly, however, the first syllable in hoodock is the English hood. The idea in Burns is that of a greedy bird or harpy. Jamieson has "hoodit crow" for carrion crow; and hoody, the hooded crow.

Hool, the husk of grain, the integument, the case or covering.

Ilk kind o' corn has its ain hool;
I think the world is a' gane wrang
When ilka wife her man wad rule.

—Tak' your Auld Cloak about ye.

Poor Leezie's heart maist lap the hool,
Near laverock height she loupit.

—BURNS: Hallowé'en.

In Dutch, hülle, cover, integument, veil; Swedish, holja, cover, envelope, case, or hull; whence also the English holster, the case of a pistol; and upholster, to make cases or coverings for furniture, and upholsterer, one who upholsters. The unnecessary and corrupt prefix of up to this word has led philologists to derive it erroneously from uphold.

The English hoils, applied to the beard and husks of barley, and hull, a husk or shell of peas and beans, seems to be from the same source as the Scottish hool, and in like manner the hull or outer case of a ship.

Sad was the chase that they ha'e gi'en to me,

My heart's near out o' hool by getting free.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

Hoolie or hooly. This word is commonly used in conjunction with "fairly," as in the phrase "hooly and fairly." Jamieson renders it "slowly and cautiously." It is derived from the Gaelic uigheil, ui-eil, heedful, cautious. The glossaries to Burns render it "stop!" There is an old Scottish song—"Oh, that my wife would drink hooly and fairly." In the glossary to Mr. Alexander Smith's edition of Burns, where "stop" would not convey the meaning, the explanation that the word means "stop" is a mere guess from the context, which proves that the editor did not really understand the word.

Still the mair I'm that way bent,
Something cries "Hoolie!"
I rede you, honest man, tak' tent,
You'll show your folly.

—BURNS: Epistle to James Smith.

Sin' every pastime is a pleasure,
I counsel you to sport with measure;
And, namelý now, May, June, and July,
Delight not long in Lorea's leisure,
But weit your lipps and labour hooly.

—On May: ALEX. SCOTT in the Evergreen.

Oh, hooly, hooly, rose she up
To the place where he was lyin'.

And when she drew the curtain bye—

"Young man, I think ye're dyin'."

—Ballad of Barbara Allan.

Hooly and fair gangs far in a day.—
ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

In the North of England hooly means tenderly, gently.—HALLIWELL.

Hootie, a ludicrous but expressive word, applied to a man like Pococurante in Voltaire's romance, who impresses the ingenuous Candide with an idea of the immensity of his wisdom, because nothing could please him. The word is derivable from hoot! or hoots! an interjection expressive of contempt, or of more or less angry dissent. Hoot! toot! is an intensification of the same idea. The English have pshaw! pish! and tut! The word in the form of ut! ut! is very common among Highlanders.

Horn. Drinking vessels, before glass was much used for the purpose, were made of horn, and are still to be found both among the poor and the rich. "To take a horn" ultimately came to signify to take a drink—just as the modern phrase, "Take a glass," does not mean to take the glass itself, but the liquor contained in it. (See GBOG, ante.)

By the gods of the ancients! Glenriddel replies,

Before I surrender so glorious a prize,
I'll conjure the ghost of the great Rorie
More,

And bumper his horn with him twenty times o'er.—BURNS: The Whistle.

Horn-dry, according to Jamieson, means "dry as a horn; eager for drink; an expression frequently used by reapers when exhausted by the labours of the harvest." But the obvious etymology—viewed in the light of the other words that have been cited—is not dry as a horn, but dry for want of a horn of liquor. (For further reference to horn as signifying a drink, see GBOG, ante.) To take a croc, or grog (the same as to take a horn or a glass), meant simply to take a drink. The French have cric and croc for a glass of spirits, as in the chorus of the old song:—

Cric, croc! à ta santé!

Horn-mad is defined in the Dictionary of Lowland Scotch (1818) as signifying quite mad; though the compiler did not seem to be aware that the madness was that which came from intoxication or the too frequent emptying of the horn. Horn-daft is of similar meaning and origin, though expressive of a minor degree of intoxication. Jamieson renders it "outrageous," and imagines it may be an allusion to an animal that pushes with its horns. Horn-idle is defined by Jamieson to mean "having nothing to do, completely unemployed." He derives the first syllable from the Saxon, and the second from the Gaelic. Horn is certainly Teutonic or Flemish, but idle is as certainly not Gaelic. The allusion in this case is obviously to the sloth or drowsiness that in lethargic persons often results from intoxication.

Hornie is a word used in Ayrshire, according to Jamieson, to signify amorous, lecherous, libidinous. Still, with the notion in his head that horn is to be taken literally, and not metaphorically, he suggests that a hornie person is one who is apt to reduce another to the state of cuckoldom, or a cornutus; and to confer upon him the imaginary horns that are supposed to grace the forehead of those ill-used and unfortunate persons. It is evident, however, that hornie meant nothing more than intoxicated to such an extent as to excite the intoxicated person to take improper liberties with women. Burns employs the word as one of the names popularly and jocularly bestowed upon the devil.

Host, to cough with effort or difficulty. The colloquial phrase, "It didna cost him a hoast to do it," signifies that the thing was done easily and without effort. From the German husten, the Flemish hosten, to cough. (See HOAST, ante.)

— Joyless Eild (old age),

W' wrinkled face,

Comes hostin', hirplin' ow'r the field

W' creepin' pace.

—BURNS: Epistle to James Smith.

Houghmagandie, child-bearing; wrongly supposed to mean the illicit intercourse of the sexes. This word has not been found in any author before Burns, and is considered by some to have been coined by that poet. But this is not likely. It is usually translated by "fornication." No etymology of the word has hitherto been suggested. Nevertheless, its component parts seem to exist in the Flemish. In that language hoog signifies high or great, and maag, the stomach or belly; maagen, bellies; and je, a diminutive particle commonly added to Flemish and Dutch words, and equivalent to the Scottish ie in bairnie, wife, laddie, lassie, &c. These words would form hoog-maagan-je—a very near approach to the houghmagandie of Burns. If this be the derivation, it would make better sense of the passage in which it occurs than that usually attributed to it. The context shows that it is not fornication which is meant—for that has already been committed—but the possible result of the sin which may appear "some other day," in the enlarged circumference of the female sinner.

There's some are fu' o' love divine,

And some are fu' o' brandy;

And mony a job that day begun

May end in houghmagandie

Some other day.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Ayrshire and Dumfriesshire retained for a longer time than the eastern counties of Scotland the words and phrases of the Gaelic language, though often greatly corrupted; and in the poems and songs of Burns words from the Gaelic are of frequent occurrence. It is not likely that Burns ever took it upon himself to invent a word; and if he did, it is even more than unlikely that it should find acceptance. Whatever it may mean, houghmagandie does not mean fornication, for the whole spirit and contents of the "Holy Fair" show that fornication is what he stigmatises as the practice of the gatherings which he satirises; and that which he calls houghmagandie is, or is likely to be, the future result of the too promiscuous intercourse of the sexes, against which he jocosely declaims. The Gaelic og and macan, a little son, may possibly afford a clue to the word; but this is a suggestion merely.

I don't remember to have met with this word anywhere except in the "Holy Fair." It may have been a word in use in Burns's day, or it may have been a coinage of Burns, that would readily convey to the minds of his readers what he meant. It may have conveyed the idea of a "dykelouper" appearing before the Session, the "snoovin' awa afore the Session" for a fault, the doing penance for "jobbing." Gangdays were the three days in Rogation week, on which priest and parishioners were accustomed to walk in procession about the parish; a remnant of the custom is still to be seen in London in the perambulations of boys about the bounds of the parish. Gandie would not be a very violent alteration of gandeye, the more especially that the spelling of Scotch words partook a good deal of the phonetic, and gangday was very probably pronounced gandie. Now, we know as a fact that, in the lapse of time, many of the ceremonies of the Church became corrupted from their original intention, and processions became in time a sort of penance for faults, and in this way it is just possible that gandie came itself to mean a penance, and houghmagandie conveyed the idea of doing penance for some wrong action that the hough or leg had something to do with.—R. DRENNAN.

Howdie or howdie-wife, a midwife, an accoucheuse. This word is preferable to the English and the foreign term borrowed from the French. Howdie-fee, the payment given to a midwife.

When skirlin' weanies see the light,
Thou makes the gossips clatter bright,
How funkin' cuifs their dearies slight—

Wae worth the name!

Nae howdie gets a social night
Or plack frae them.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

No satisfactory clue to the etymology of this word has been made known. In Gaelic the midwife is called the "knee-woman," beangloinne; in French, the sage femme, or wise woman; in Teutonic, the weh mutter; in Spanish, partera, and in Italian, comare, the latter word signifying the French commère—the old English and Scotch cummer—or gossip. Possibly the true origin of the Scottish word is to be found in houd or haud, to hold, to sustain; and the midwife was the holder, helper, sustainer, and comforter of the woman who suffered the pains of labour; the sage femme of the French, who was wise and skilful enough to perform her delicate function.

Howff, a favourite public-house, where friends and acquaintances were accustomed to resort; from the Gaelic uamh (uaf), a cave. "Caves of harmony," as they were called, were formerly known in Paris, and one long existed in London under the name of the Coalhole. They were small places of convivial resort, which, in London, have grown into music-halls. Jamieson traces howff to the Teutonic hof, a court-yard, and gast-hof, an inn or yard. It is possible that he is right, though it is equally possible that the German hof is but a form of the Gaelic uamh.

This will be delivered to you' by a Mrs. Hyslop, landlady of the Globe Tavern here, which for many years has been my howff, and where our friend Clarke and I have had many a merry squeeze.—BURNS: Letter to George Thompson.

—MOTHERWELL: The Broom Blooms Bonnie.

Hawk the tow out o' your lug an' hear till a sang.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

How-towdies, barndoor fowls; origin of the word unknown, though it has been suggested that it may be a corruption of the Gaelic eun-doide, a fowl to the hand, or a fowl ready to the hand if wanted.

Hunting the fox prevents him from growing ower fat on how-towdies.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Hummel-corn, mean, shabby, of small account; a term applied to the lighter grain which falls from the rest when it is winnowed.

A lady returning from church expressed her low opinion of the sermon she had heard by calling it a hummel-corn discourse.—DEAN RAMSAY.

The derivation is unknown, though hummel-corn has been suggested.

Hummel-doddie, dowdy, ill-fitting, in bad taste.

Whatna hummel-doddie o' a mutch [cap] hae ye gotten?—DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

Humple, to walk lamely and painfully, to hobble.

Then humpled he out in a hurry,

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

Hunkers, the loins; to hunker down, to squat on the ground.

The word seems to be allied to the English hunk, a lump; whence to squat down on the earth in a lumpish fashion.

Wi' ghastly ee, poor Tweedle Dee
Upon his hunkers bended,
And prayed for grace wi' cuthless face
To see the quarrel ended.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

Hurdies, the hips, the podez of the Romans, the pyge of the Greeks. From the Gaelic aird, a rounded muscle or swelling; plural airde, also airdhe, a wave, or of a wavy form.

Ye godly brethren o' the sacred gown,

—BURNS: Tam O'Shanter.

Pendable? ye may say that; his craig could get hand o' Rob.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

The old French poet, François Villon, when condemned to be hung, wrote a stanza in which the above idea of Sir Walter Scott occurs in language about as forcible and not a whit more elegant:—

Je suis Français (dont ce me poise),
Né de Paris, emprés Ponthoise,
Or d'une corde d'une toise
Sçaura mon col que mon cul poise.

Burns also uses the word in the sense of "rounded or swelling," without reference to any portion of the human frame, as in the following:—

The groaning trencher there ye fill;
Your hurdies like a distant hill.

—To a Haggis.

Hurkle, to yield obedience or deference.

Grant, an' Mackenzie, an' Murray,
An' Cameron will hurkle to nane.
HOGG, the Ettrick Shepherd.

Hurl, to wheel; hurl-barrow, wheel-barrow; a corruption of whirl, to turn round; hurley-hacket, a contemptuous name for an ill-hung carriage or other vehicle.

It's kittle for the cheeks when the hurl-barrow gangs o'er the brig o' the nose.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

"I never thought to have entered ane o' these hurley-hackets," she said, as she seated herself, "and sic a thing as it is—scarce room for twa folk."—SCOTT: St. Ronan's Well.

Hynde, gentle, courteous. An illiterate member of Parliament in the unruly session of 1887 objected to the use of this word as applied to an agricultural labourer, believing that it signified a deer or other quadruped, and never having suspected that it was a term of courtesy. The member himself, called honourable by the courtesy of Parliament, was ignorant of the fact that courtesy was extended even to farm-labourers by all gentlemen and men of good heart and good manners.

Then she is to yon hynde squire's yetts,
And tirl'd at the pin,
And wha sae busy as the hynde squire

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: Hynd Horn.

Hyte, joyous; excited unduly or overmuch.

Ochone for poor Castalian drinkers!
The witchin', cursed, delicious blinkers
Ha'e put me hyte.

—BURNS: Epistle to Major Logan.

This word is derived from the Gaelic aite, joy, gladness, fun, and appears to be related to the English hoity-toity.

I

Ier-oe, a great grandchild; erroneously spelled jeroy in the new editions of Jamieson, and cited as a "Shetland word."

May health and peace with mutual rays
Shine on the evening o' his days,
Till his wee curlie John's ier oe,
When ebbing life nae mair shall flow,
The last sad mournful rites bestow.

—BURNS: A Dedication to Gavin Hamilton.

The word is from the Gaelic oghe, a grandchild, and iar, after; whence an after grandchild, or great grandchild.

Igo and ago, iram, coram, dago.

The chorus of ancient Gaelic boat-songs, or Ramh-rans, introduced by Burns in his song, "Ken ye aught o' Captain Grose?" The words resolve themselves into the Gaelic aighe, aghach, iorram, corruig-heamh dachaidh, which signify "Joyous and brave is the song of the boat that is rowing homewards."

Ilka, each, as "ilka ane," each one; ilk, that same. Ilk is used for the designation of a person whose patronymic is the same as the name of his estate—such as Mackintosh of Mackintosh—i.e., Mackintosh of that Ilk. This Scottish word has crept into English, though with a strange perversion of its meaning, as in the following:—

We know, however, that many barbarians of their ilk, and even of later times, knowingly destroyed many a gold and silver vessel that fell into their hands.—St. James's Gazette.

Matilda lived in St. John's Villas, Twickenham; Mr. Passmore in King Street of the same ilk.—Daily Telegraph.

Ingine, genius, "the fire of genius" or "poetic fire," are common expressions. Burns, in an "Epistle to John Lapraik," whose poetry he greatly admired, and thought equal to that of Alexander Pope or James Beattie, made inquiries concerning him, and was told that he was "an odd kind o' chiel about Muirkirk."

An' sac about him there I spier't,
Then a' that ken'd him round declar't

He had ingine,
That nane excelled it—few cam near't,
It was sac fine.

It would seem on first consideration that this peculiarly Scottish word was of the same Latin derivation as genius, ingenious, ingenuity, and the archaic English word cited in Halliwell, "ingene," which is translated "genius or wit." It is open to inquiry, however, whether the idea of fire does not underlie the word, and whether it is not in the form in which Burns employs it, traceable to the Gaelic ain, an intransitive prefix or particle signifying great, very, or intense; and teine, fire.

The late Samuel Rogers, author of the "Pleasures of Memory," in a controversy with me on the character of Lord Byron, spoke very unfavourably of his poetical genius, which I praised and defended to the best of my ability. Mr. Rogers, however, always returned to the attack with renewed vigour. Driven at last to extremity, I thought to clench all argument by saying—"At least you will admit, Mr. Rogers, that there was fire in Byron's poetry?" "Yes," he answered, "hell-fire!"—C. M.

Ingle, the fire; ingle-side, the fireside, the hearth; ingle-neuk, the chimney corner; ingle-bred, home-bred, or bred at the domestic hearth; inglin, fuel.

Better a wee ingle to warm you, than a muckle fire to burn you.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scotts Proverbs.

His wee bit ingle blinkin' bonnilie. 1
—BURNS.

It's an auld story now, and everybody tells it, as we were doing, in their ain way by the ingle-side.—SCOTT: Guy Mannerling.

The derivation of ingle, in the Scottish sense of the word, is either from the Gaelic aingeal, the Kymric engyl, heat, fire, or from ion, fit, becoming, comfortable; and cuil, a corner. That of the English ingle, meaning a favourite, a friend, or lover, is not easy to discover. The word occurs in a passage from an Elizabethan play, with a detestable title, quoted by Nares:—

Call me your love, your ingle, your cousin, or so; but sister at no hand.

Also in Massinger's "City Madam":—

His quondam patrons, his dear ingils now.

Ingle, from one signifying a lover in the legitimate use of that word, was corrupted into an epithet for the male lover of a male, in the most odious sense. In "Donne's Elegies," it is used as signifying amorous endearment of a child to its father:—

Thy little brother, which like fairy spirits,
Oft skipped into our chamber those sweet nights
And kissed and ingled on thy father's knee.

No satisfactory etymology for the English word has ever been suggested, and that from the Spanish yngle, the groin, which finds favour with Nares and other philologists, is manifestly inadmissible. It is possible, however, that the English ingle was originally the same as the Scottish, and that its first meaning as "love" was derived from the idea still current, that calls a beloved object a flame. Hotten's Slang Dictionary has "flame, a sweetheart." Ingle was sometimes written enghle, which latter word, according to Mr. Halliwell, signifies, as used by Ben Jonson, a gull—also, to coax or to wheedle.

Intill, into; till, to. What's intillt? What's in it?

An English traveller, staying at a great hotel in Edinburgh, was much pleased with the excellence of the hotch-potch at dinner, and asked the head-waiter how it was made, and of what it was made? The waiter replied that there were peas intillt, and beans intillt, and onions intillt. "But what's intillt?" asked the Englishman. "I'm just tellin' you that there's beans intillt, and peas intillt, and neeps intillt, and carrots intillt!"—

"Yes! yes! I know—beans, peas, onions, turnips, and carrots," said the Englishman; "but what's intillt? Is it salt, pepper, or what? Please tell me what's intillt?"

"Eh, man!" replied the impatient waiter, "ye maun be unco' slow o' comprehension. I was tellin' ye owre and owre again that there are beans intillt, and peas intillt!"—

"And tult? What the devil is tult, or intillt, or whatever the name is? Can you not give a plain answer to a plain question? Does tult mean barley, or mutton, or mustard, or some nameless ingredient that is a trade secret, or that you are afraid to mention?"

"Oh, man!" said the waiter, with a groan, "if I had your head in my keeping, I'd gie it sic a thumpin' as wad put some smeddum intillt."

Tradition records that the Englishman has never yet ascertained what intillt means, but wanders through Scotland vainly seeking enlightenment.—Knife and Fork, edited by BLANCHARD JERROLD.

I wish ye were in Heckie-burnie.

"This," says Jamieson, "is a strange form of imprecation. The only account given of this place is that it is three miles beyond hell. In Aberdeen, if one says, 'go to the devil!' the other often replies, 'go you to Heckie-burnie!'" No etymology is given. Possibly it originated in the pulpit, when some Gaelic preacher had taken the story of Dives and Lazarus for his text; and the rich Dives, amid his torments in hell, asked in vain for a drop of water to cool his parched tongue. The intolerable thirst was his greatest punishment; and in Gaelic Aicheadh is refusal, and buirne, water from the burn or stream, whence the phrase would signify the refusal or denial of water. This is offered as a suggestion only, to account for an expression that has been hitherto given up as inexplicable.

J

Jamph, to trudge, to plod, to make way laboriously, to grow weary with toil; also, to endeavour to take liberties with an unwilling or angry woman; to pursue her under difficulty and obstruction.

"Oh bonnie lass!" says he, "ye'll gie's a kiss,
And I shall set you right on, hit or miss."
"A hit or miss, I want na help of you,— Kiss ye sklate stanes, they winna wat your mou."

And off she goes;—the fellow loot a rin,
As gin he ween'd with speed to tak her in;
But as luck was, a knibbloch took his tae,
And o'er fa's he, and tumbles down the brae;

His neebor leugh, and said it was well wair'd—

"Let never jamphers yet be better sair'd."
—ROSS'S Helenore.

The etymology of jamph—whether it means to plod or flirt, or both—is obscure. It is possibly, but not certainly, from the Gaelic deanamh (de pronounced as je), doing, acting, performing. Jamieson thinks that, in the sense of flirting, it may come from the Teutonic schimpfen, to mock; and in the sense of plod or trudge, from schampfen, to slip aside.

Jauner, idle talk; to wander listlessly about without any particular object.

Oh, haud your tongue now, Luckie Laing,
Oh, haud your tongue and jauner.

—BURNS: The Lass of Ecclefechan.

We've had a good jauner this forenoon.

—JAMIESON.

In the sense of wandering idly, this word seems to be but a variety or corruption of dauner.

Jawp, to bespatter with mud or water. To "jawp the water" is a metaphor for spending time in any negotiation or transaction without coming to a definite conclusion. "I'll no jawp water wi' ye"—"I'll not enter into further discussions or wrangles with you." "To jawp waters with one," to play fast and loose, to strive to be off a bargain once made.

Then down ye'll hurl, deil nor ye never rise,
And dash the gumly jawps up to the skies.

—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Jawthers, quasi synonymous with the English slang "to jaw," to dispute or argue abusively, as in the phrase "let me have none of your jaw." Jawthers, idle wranglings, and also any frivolous discourse.

Jee, to move. This word survives in English as a command to a horse, in the phrase jee-up and jee-wo.

I am sick an' very love sick,
Ae foot I canna jee.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

Jimp, slender in the waist.

She is as jimp i' the middle sae fou'
As is a willow wand.

—The Laird o' Warriston.

Jink, to play, to sport, to dodge in and out, from whence the phrase "high-jinks," sometimes used in England to describe the merriment and sport of servants in the kitchen when their masters and mistresses are out; a quick or sudden movement; also to escape, to trick, "to gie the jink," to give the slip, to elude.

And now, auld Cloots, I ken ye're thinkin'
A certain bardie, rantin', drinkin',
Some luckless hour will send him linkin'

To your black pit;
But faith he'll turn a corner jinkin',
And cheat ye yet!

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

! Lang may your elbuck jink and diddle.

—BURNS: Second Epistle to Davie.

Oh, thou, my muse! guid auld Scotch drink,
Whether through wimplin' worms thou
jink,

Or, richly brown, ream o'er the brink
In glorious faem.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Jamieson derives the word from the Swedish dwink-a, and the German schwinken, to move quickly, but no such word appears in the German dictionaries, and the etymology is otherwise unsatisfactory. The Gaelic dian (pronounced jian) and dianach signifies brisk, nimble, which is probably the root of jink as used by Burns.

Jirble, jirgle. Both of these words signify to spill any liquid by making it move from side to side in the vessel that contains it; to empty any liquid from one vessel to another; also, the small quantity left in a glass or tea-cup.

The waur for themselves and for the country baith, St. Ronan's; it's the junketing and the jirbling in tea and sic truipery that brings our nobles to ninepence, and mony a het ha' house to a hired lodging in the Abbey.—SCOTT: St. Ronan's Well. *

Jock in Scottish, and in English Jack, are used as familiar substitutes for the Christian name John, and are supposed to be derived from the French Jacques. This word, however, means James, and not John. The use of the prefixes Jack and Jock in many English and Scottish compounds that have no obvious reference to the Christian names either of James or John, suggests that there may possibly be a different origin for the word. Among others that may be cited, are Jack-tar, Jack-priest, Jack-of-all-trades, and such implements in common use as boot-jack, roasting-jack, jack-knife, the jacks or hammers of a pianoforte, the jack or clapper of a bell, jack-boots, jack-chain, the Union-jack or flag, jack-staff, jack-towel, jack-block, and many others which are duly set forth in the dictionaries, without suggestion of any other etymology than that from John. Shakspeare in his sonnets uses the word jack for the hammers of the virginal, and in Richard II. employs it to signify a working-man:—

Since every jack became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a jack.

Besides the Scottish term of familiarity or affection for a man, the word Jock occurs in two singular words cited by Jamieson—Jock-te-leer, which he says is a cant term for a pocket almannack, "derived from Jock the liar," from the loose or false predictions with regard to the weather which are contained in such publications; and Jock-te-leg, a folding or clasp-knife.

It is difficult to connect either the Scottish Jock or the English Jack in these words with the name of John, unless upon the supposition that John and Jack are synonymous with man, and that the terms are transferable to any and every implement that aids or serves the purpose of a man's work. Is it not possible that Jock and Jack are mere varieties of the Gaelic deagh (the de pronounced as j), which signifies good, excellent, useful, befitting? or the Kymric iach, whole, useful? and deach, a movement for a purpose? This derivation would meet the sense of all the compound words and phrases in which jock and jack enter, other than those in which it indubitably signifies a Christian name.

The word jocteleer—an almannack, in Jamieson—tried by this test, would signify, good to examine, to learn; from deagh, good, and leir, perception.

In like manner, the English words and phrases, Jack-tar, Jack-priest, Jack-of-all-trades, might signify good, able-bodied sailor, good priest, and good at all trades. Even jockey, a good rider, may be derivable from the same source. Thus, too, in Shakspeare's phrase, Jack may signify, not a John, as a generic name, but deagh (jeack), as applied in the common phrase "my good man," and in French bon homme—epithets which, although in one sense respectful, are only employed by superiors to inferiors, and infer somewhat of social depreciation.

In reference to Joctelag or Jocktelay, it should be mentioned that Burns spells the word in the first manner, and Allan Ramsay in the second. Jamieson says that there was once a famous cutler of Liège, in Belgium, named Jacques, and that his cutlery being in repute, any article of his make was called a Jacques de Liège. As no mention of this man or his business has been found anywhere except in the pages of Jamieson, it has been suspected that the name was evolved from the imagination of that philologist. Whether that be so or not, it is curious that the Gaelic dioghail signifies to avenge, and dioghail taiche (pronounced joj-al taiche), an avenger. In early times it was customary to bestow names of affection upon swords, such as Excalibur, the sword of King Arthur, Durandarte, and many others, the swords of renowned knights of romance and chivalry; and if upon swords, probably upon daggers and knives; and no epithet in a barbarous age—when every man had to depend upon his own prowess for self-defence or revenge for injuries—could be more appropriate for a strong knife than the “avenger.”

Joe or Jo, a lover, a friend, a dear companion; derived not from Joseph, as has been asserted, nor from the French joie or English joy, as Jamieson supposes, but, more probably from the Gaelic deò (the d pronounced as j), the soul, the vital spark, the life; Greek ζῆν.

John Anderson my jo, John.

—BURNS.

And sir, for your courtesy,

As ye gae by the Bass, then,

For the love ye bear to me,

Buy me a keeking-glass, then.

Keek into the clear draw-well,

Janet, Janet,

There ye'll see your bonnie sel',

My jo, Janet.

—Old Song: remodelled by BURNS.

Joram, a boat song; a rowing song, in which the singers keep time with their voices to the motion of the oars; from the modern Gaelic iorram. This word is often erroneously used in the phrase “push about the orum,” as if orum signified a bowl of liquor which had to be passed round the table. An instance of this mistake occurs in Burns:—

And here's to them that, like oursel',

Can push about the orum;

And here's to them that wish us weel—

May a' that's guid watch o'er 'em.

—Oh May, thy Morn.

The ancient and correct Gaelic for a boat song is oran iomraidh or iomramh; from oran, a song; iom, many, and ramh, an oar, of which iorram, or the song of many oars, is a corruption. The connection between iorram, a boat song, and orum, a drinking vessel, is probably due to the circumstance that the chorus of the boat song was often sung by the guests at a convivial party, when the bottle or bowl was put in circulation.

Jouk, to stoop down; in the English vernacular to duck the head, or duck down; also to evade a question. Jouker, a dissembler, a deceiver.

Neath the brae the burnie jouks.

—TANNAHILL: Gloomy Winter.

Jouk and let the jaw go by (Proverb)—i.e., evade replying to intemperate or abusive language.

Jow, the swing or boom of a large bell.

Now Clinkumbell

Began to jow.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

And every jow the kirk bell gied.

BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

Jow means to swing, and not the “clang or boom of a large bell.”

Now Clinkumbell, wi' rattling tone

Began to jow and croon.

The bell-rope began to shake,—the bell began to swing (jow) and (croon) ring out.

—R. DRENNAN.

Jowler. This word is used by Burns in the “Address of Beelzebub to the President of the Highland Society,” in which, speaking of gipsies, he says:—

An' if the wives an' dirty brats
E'en thigger at your doors an' yetts,
Get out a horsewhip or a jowler,

An' gar the tattered gipsies pack
Wi' a' their bastards on their back.

Jamieson does not include the word in his Dictionary, nor do the glossaries to Allan Ramsay or Burns contain it. By the context, it would seem to mean a cudgel. In this sense the word has support in the northern counties of England. Jolle, according to Mr. Halliwell Phillips, signifies to beat; and jowler means thick and clumsy—epithets which describe a bludgeon and a cudgel.

"Did you give him a good drubbing?"
"I gave him a good tidy jowling."—
WRIGHT'S Archaic Dictionary.

In the sense of thick and clumsy, jolle and jowl are apparently the roots of English jolter-head, a thick-headed fellow. Jowler, as the name of an instrument of punishment, whether a cudgel or not, is probably from the Gaelic diol (jole, d pronounced as j), to punish, to avenge, to requite, to pay; diolair, an avenger. In colloquial English the threat, "I'll pay you out," has a similar meaning.

Jundie, to jostle, to struggle, to contend and push in a crowd; to hog-shoulder, or push with the shoulders in order to force a way.

If a man's gaun down the brae, ilk ane gi'es him a jundie.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S
Scots Proverbs.

The warldly race may drudge and drive,
Hog-shoulder, jundie, stretch, and strive.
—BURNS: To William Simpson.

Jute, a term of reproach applied to a weak, worthless, spiritless person, especially to a woman. It is also used in reference to sour or stale liquor, and to weak broth or tea. It seems to be derived from the Gaelic diùid (diù pronounced as ju), sneaking, mean-spirited, silly, weak; and diu, the worst, the refuse of things.

K

Kail, cabbage, the German kohl; a word that survives in English in the first syllable of cauliflower. By an extension of meaning kail sometimes signifies dinner, as in the familiar invitation once common, "Come an' tak' your kail wi' me," i.e., come and dine with me.

Kail-runt, a cabbage stalk; kail-blade, a cabbage leaf.

When I lookit to my dart,

It was sae blunt,

Fient haet it wad hae pierced the heart
O' a kail-runt.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Just — in a kail-blade and send it,—
Baith the disease and what'll mend it,
At ance he'll tell't.—Idem.

Kain, tribute, tax, tithe; from the Gaelic cain, tribute; cain-each, tributary.

Our laird gets in his racked rents,
His coal, his kain.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Kain to the King.

—Jacobite Song (1715).

Kain-bairns, says a note in Sir Walter Scott's "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," were infants, according to Scottish superstition, that were seized in their cradles by warlocks and witches, and paid as a kain, or tax, to their master the devil. Jamieson is in error in deriving kain from the Gaelic cean, the head.

Kaur-handit, left-handed. In this combination, kaur does not signify the left as distinguished from the right, but is from the Gaelic car, signifying a twist or turn. The hand so designated implies that it is twisted or turned into a function that ought to be performed by the other.

Kaury-maury is used in the "Vision of Piers Ploughman."

Clothed in a kaury-maury
I couthe it nought descryve.

In the glossary to Mr. Thomas Wright's edition of this ancient poem, he suggests that kaury-maury only means care and trouble; a conjecture that is supported by the Gaelic car, and mearachd, an error, a mistake, a wrong, an injustice.

Kebar, a rafter, a beam in the roof of a house; from the Gaelic cabar, a pole, the trunk of a tree. "Putting" or throwing the cabar is a gymnastic feat still popular at Highland games in Scotland.

He ended, and the kebars shook Above the chorus roar.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

Kebbuck, a cheese; kebbuck heel, a remnant or hunk of cheese. From the Gaelic cabag, a cheese,

The weel-hained kebbuck.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

In comes a gaucie, gash, gude wife,
An' sits down by the fire;
Syne draws her kebbuck and her knife—
The lasses they are shy.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Keck or keckle, to draw back from a bargain, to change one's mind, to flinch; from the Gaelic caochail, to change.

"I have kek'd"—I decline adhering to the offer.—JAMIESON.

Keckle is also a form of the English cackle, and has no affinity or synonymity with keek.

Keek, to peep, to pry, to look cautiously about; possibly from the Gaelic cidh, pronounced kidh or kee, to see; a cidhis, a mask to cover the face all but the eyes, a vizor.

The robin came to the wren's nest
And keekit in.—Nursery Rhyme.

Stars dinna keek in,

And see me wi' Mary.—BURNS.

When the tod (fox) is in the wood, he cares na how many folk keek at his tail.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scotts Proverbs.

A clergyman in the West of Scotland once concluded a prayer as follows :—" O Lord ! Thou art like a mouse in a drystane dyke, aye keekin' out at us frae holes and crannies, but we canna see Thee."—ROGERS' Illustrations of Scottish Life.

Keeking-glass, a looking-glass, a mirror.

She. Kind sir, for your courtesy,
As ye gang by the Bass, then,
For the love ye bear to me,
Buy me a keeking-glass, then.

He. Keek into the draw-well,
Janet, Janet !
There ye'll see your bonnie sel',
My jo, Janet.—BURNS.

Keel or keill, a small vessel or skiff, a lighter, and not merely the keel of any ship or boat as in English. It is synonymous with coracle, or the Gaelic cur-ach, and is probably derived from the Gaelic caol, narrow, from its length as distinguished from its breadth.

Oh, merry may the keel row,
The keel row, the keel row ;
Oh, merry may the keel row,
The ship that my love's in.
—Northern Ballad.

Keelivine, a crayon pencil. Origin unknown.

Kell, a woman's cap ; from the Gaelic ceil, a covering.

Then up and gat her seven sisters,
And served to her a kell,
And every steek that they put in Sewed to a silver bell.

—Border Minstrelsy : The Gay Goss-hawk.

Kelpie, a water-sprite. Etymology unknown ; that suggested by Jamieson from calf is not probable.

What is it ails my good bay mare ?

What is it makes her start and shiver ?
She sees a kelpie in the stream,
Or fears the rushing of the river.

—Legends of the Isles.

The kelpie gallop'd o'er the green,
He seemed a knight of noble mien ;
And old and young stood up to see,
And wondered who this knight could be.

—Idem.

The side was steep, the bottom deep,
Frae bank to bank the water pouring ;
And the bonnie lass did quake for fear,
She heard the water-kelpie roaring.

—Ballad of Annan Water.

Keltie, a large glass or bumper, to drain which was imposed as a punishment upon those who were suspected of not drinking fairly. "Cleared keltie aff," according to Jamieson, was a phrase that signified that the glass was quite empty. The word seems to be derived from kelter, to tilt up, to tip up, to turn upside down, and to have been applied to the glasses used in the hard-drinking days of our great-grandfathers, that were made without stems, and rounded at the bottom like the Dutch dolls that roll from side to side, from inability to stand upright. With a glass of this kind in his hand, the toper had to empty it before he could replace it on the table. Jamieson was probably ignorant of this etymology, though he refers to the German kelter, which signifies a wine-press. Keltern, in the same language, is to tread the grapes. But these words do not apply to either the Scottish keltie or kelter.

Kemmin, a champion, a corruption of kemp (q.v.).

He works like a kemmin.

He fechts like a kemmin.

—JAMIESON.

The Kymric has ceimmyn, a striver in games; the Flemish kampen; and German kämpfen, to fight, to struggle, to contend.

Kemp, a warrior, a hero, a champion; also to fight, to strive, to contend for the superiority or the mastery. Kemper is one who kemps or contends; used in the harvest field to signify a reaper who excels his comrades in the quantity and quality of his work. Kempion, or Kemp Owain, is the name of the champion in two old Scottish ballads who "borrows," or ransoms, a fair lady from the spells cast upon her by demoniacal agency, by which she was turned into the shape of a wild beast. Kempion, or Kemp Owain, kisses her thrice, notwithstanding her hideousness and loathsomeness, and so restores her to her original beauty. Kempion is printed in Scott's "Border Minstrelsy," and Kemp Owain in Motherwell's "Minstrelsy, Ancient and Modern."

Kennawhat, a nondescript, a "je ne sais quoi," or know-not-what.

Kenspeckle, noticeable, conspicuous, noteworthy.

Kep, to catch, to receive; from the Gaelic ecap, to intercept, to stop, to receive.

Ilka blade o' grass keps its ain drap o' dew.
—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Ilk cowslip cup shall kep a tear.

—BURNS.

Ker haund or ker-handed, left-handed, awkward; from the Gaelic, eer, a twist; and ccarr, wrong, awkward. See KAUR-HANDIT, ante.

It maun be his left foot foremost, unless he was ker-haund.—Noctes Ambrosiana.

Ket, a fleece; tawted ket, a matted or ropy fleece. From the Gaelic ceath, a sheep or sheep-skin.

She was nae get o' moorland tips,
Wi' tawted ket an' hairy hips.

—BURNS.

Kevil, a lot; to cast kevils, to draw lots.

Let every man be content with his ain kevil.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scotts Proverbs.

And they coost kevils them among
Wha should to the greenwood gang.

—COSPATRICK: Border Minstrelsy.

Kidney. "Of the same kidney," of a like sort. The Slang Dictionary has, "Two of a kidney, or two of a sort—as like as two pears, or two kidneys in a bunch." Sir Richard Ayscough says that Shakspeare's phrase, which he put into the mouth of Falstaff, means "a man whose kidneys are as fat as mine—i.e., a man as fat as I am." A little knowledge of the original language of the British people would show the true root of the word to be the Gaelic ceudna—pronounced keudna, sort, or of the same sort; ceudnachd, identity, similarity.

Think of that! a man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter.—Merry Wives of Windsor.

Your poets, spendthrifts, and other fools of that kidney.—BURNS: Letter to Mr. Robert Ainslie.

Kill-cow, an expressive colloquialism which signifies a difficulty that may be surmounted by resolution and energy. Jamieson translates it "a matter of consequence, a serious affair; as in the phrase, 'Ye needna mind; I'm sure it's nae sic great kill-cow,'" and adds, "in reference, most probably, to a blow that is sufficient to knock down or kill a cow!" Jamieson forgot the reference in his own Dictionary to cow, in which the word signifies a ghost, spectre, or goblin. The phrase might be rendered, "a ghost that might be laid without much difficulty."

Killicoup, a somersault, head-over-heels.

That gang tried to keep violent leasehold o' your ain fields, an' your ain ha', till ye gied them a killicoup.—HOGG'S Brownie of Bodsbeck.

Kilt, a garment worn by Highlanders, descending from the waist to the middle of the knee; to lift the petticoats up to the knee, or wear them no lower than the knee; to raise the clothes in fording a stream. "High kilted" is a metaphor applied to conversation or writing that savours of immodesty. From the Gaelic ceil, to cover; ceilte, covered.

Her tartan petticoat she'll kilt.

—BURNS: Cry and Prayer.

She's kilted her coats o' green satin,
She's kilted them up to the knee,
And she's off wi' Lord Ronald M'Donald,
His bride and his darling to be.

—Old Song: Lizzie Lindsay.

Kimmer, a female friend, gossip, or companion; from the French commère; synonymous with the English gammer.

My kimmer and I gaed to the fair
Wi' twal punds Scots on sarkin' to wear;
But we drank the gude braw hawkie dry,
And sarkless cam hame, my kimmer and I.

—CROMEY'S Remains.

Kink, a knot, an entanglement, an involution; the same in Flemish; whence kink-host, or kink-cough, the whooping-cough, or generally a violent fit of coughing, in which the paroxysm seems to twist knots into each other. The word kink is sometimes applied to a fit of irrepressible laughter. Kink-cough has been corrupted in English into king-cough. Mr. Robert Chambers, on a note on kink, which occurs in the "Ballad of the Laird o' Logie," explains it as meaning to wring the fingers till the joints crack, which he says is a very striking though a simple delineation of grief.

And sae she tore her yellow hair,
Kinking her fingers ane by ane,
And cursed the day that she was born.

Kinnen, rabbits; corruption of the English coney.

Make kinnen and caper ready, then,
And venison in greit plentie,
We'll welcome here our royal King.

—Ballad of Johnnie Armstrong.

Kinsh. According to Jamieson, this word signifies kindred.

The man may either tine a stot that canna count his kinsh.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

"The man may easily lose a young ox that cannot count his kinsh." The meaning of kinsh in this passage is not clear. It has been suggested that it is a misprint for either kine or kindred. Perhaps, however, the true meaning is to be sought in the Gaelic cinneas (kinneash), which means growth or natural increase. This interpretation renders the proverb intelligible—a man may afford to lose one stot who cannot count the increase of his flocks and herds.

Kintra cooser, one who runs about the country; a term sometimes applied to an entire horse, which is taken from place to place for the service of mares.

If that daft buckie, Geordie Wales,
Was threshin' still at hizzie's tails,
Or if he was grown oughtlins douser,
And no a perfect kintra cooser.

—BURNS: To one who had sent him a newspaper.

The word cooser appears in Shakspeare as cosier or cozier, and has puzzled all the commentators to explain it. Cosier's catches were songs sung by working men over their libations in roadside ale-houses. Johnson thought that cosier must mean a tailor, from coudre, to sew; and cousue, that which is sewed;

while others equally erudite were of opinion that cosiers were cobblers or tinkers. The cosiers who sang catches might have belonged to all or any of these trades; but the word, now obsolete in English, and almost obsolete in Scotch, is the Gaelic cosaire, a pedestrian, a way-farer, a tramp. Up to the time of Dr. Johnson's visit to the Hebrides, Highland gentlemen of wealth or importance used to keep servants or gillies to run before them, who were known as cosiers—misprinted by Boswell as coshirs. Jamieson, unaware of the simple origin of the word, as applied to a horse made to perambulate the country, states that cooser is a stallion, and derives it from the French coursier, a courser. But courser itself is from the same root, from course, a journey. The coarse allusion of Burns to the Prince of Wales expressed a hope that he had ceased to run about the country after women.

Kipper, to split, dry, and cure fish by salting them. Kipped herrings, haddocks, and salmon are largely prepared and consumed in Scotland, and to a much smaller extent in the large cities of England. The mode of kippering is scarcely known to the south of the Tweed, and where known, is not so successfully practised, or with such delicate and satisfactory results, as in Scotland. The derivation of the word is uncertain.

Kirk, is the original form of the word, which has been Anglicised into church. It is derived from the idea of, and is identical with, circle or kirkle, the form in which, in the primitive ages of the world, and still later, in the Druidical era, all places of worship—whether of the supreme God or of the Sun, supposed to be His visible representative—were always constructed. The great stone circle, or kirkle, of Stonehenge was one of the earliest kirks, or churches, erected in these islands. The traces of many smaller stone circles are still to be found in Scotland. The word is derived from the Gaelic coir, a circle; whence also court, and the French cour.

Kirnie, a forward boy who gives himself prematurely and offensively the airs and habits of a man. Shakspeare speaks of "kerns and gallowglasses," kern being a contraction of the Gaelic eathairneach [kearneach], an armed peasant serving in the army, also a boor or sturdy fellow. Jamieson derives kirnie from the Kymric coryn or cor, a dwarf or pigmy; but as the Lowland Scottish people were more conversant with their neighbours of the Highlands than with the distant Welsh, it is probable that the Gaelic and not the Kymric derivation of the word is the correct one.

Kist, a chest, a trunk, a box; from the French caisse.

Steek the awmrie, shut the kist,
Or else some gear will soon be mist.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Donald Caird.

A man who had had four wives, and who meditated a fifth time entering the marriage state, was conversing with a friend on the subject, who was rather disposed to barter upon his past matrimonial experience, as having made a good deal of money by his wives. "Na! na!" said he, "they came to me wi' auld kists, an' I sent them hame (to the grave) wi' new anes."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Kith, known to or acquainted with; from kythe, to show, and the old English couth, to know or see; a word that survives in concoth, with a somewhat different meaning, as strange, odd, or unfamiliar. Kith is generally in modern English used in combination with kin, as kith and kin, whence the word is erroneously supposed to mean relationship in blood and ancestry, and to be synonymous with kin and kinship.

Whether thousands of our own kith shall be sacrificed to an obsolete shibboleth and the bloodthirsty operations of an artificial competition.—Letter on Large Weights, by ARNOLD WHITE—Times, November 30, 1887.

Kittle, difficult, ticklish, dangerous. From the Dutch and Flemish kittelen, to tickle.

It's kittle shooting at corbies and clergy.
It's kittle for the cheeks when the hurl-barrow gangs o'er the brig o' the nose.

Cats and maidens are kittle ware.

It's kittle to waken sleeping dogs.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

As for your priesthood I shall say but little,

Corbies and clergy are a shot right kittle.

—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Kivan, kivin. These words signify a covey, a bevy, a troop, a company, a flock, a crowd, or an assemblage. They are evidently from the Gaelic coimh (coiv), equivalent to the prefix co or con, and feadhain (d silent), a troop or band of people, or of living animals of any description.

Klem or clem. In Lancashire and other parts of England, clem signifies to become stupefied or worn out with hunger, to starve. In Scotland, klem sometimes means perverse, obstinate, insensible to reason and to argument; and, according to Jamieson, "means low, paltry, untrustworthy, unprincipled; and, as used by the boys of the High School of Edinburgh, curious, singular, odd, queer." He derives it from the Icelandic kleima, macula, a blot or stain—i.e., having a character that lies under a stain. But the Icelandic does not convey either the Scottish or the English meaning of the word, which is in reality the Flemish kleum, lethargic, stupefied either from cold, hunger, or by defect of original vitality and force of mind or body. The Flemish verkleumte is translated in the French dictionaries as engourdi, benumbed, stupefied, stiffened. By a metaphorical extension of meaning, all these physical senses of the word apply to mental conditions, and thus account for all the varieties of the Scottish meaning.

The English clem may be possibly traced to the German klemmen, to pinch, to squeeze; from klemme, a narrow place, a strait, a difficulty, whence clemmed, pinched with hunger.

Knack, to taunt, to make a sharp answer; the same apparently as the English "nag," as applied to the nagging of a disagreeable woman. Knacky, or knacksy, quick at repartee.

Knappin-hammer. A hammer with a long handle used for breaking stones on the road, or in houses of detention for vagrants or criminals. From the English knap or nap, a smart blow on the head, as in the colloquial threat to an unruly boy, "you'll nap it."

What's a' your jargon o' the schools—
Your Latin names for books or stools;
If honest Nature made you fools,
What sairs your grammars?
Ye'd better ta'en up spades or shoofs
Or knappin hammers.

—BURNS: Epistle to Lapraik.

Kneef, active, alert; "ower kneef" or over active suggests, according to Jamieson, the charge of illicit intercourse. The derivation is probably from the Gaelic gníomh (gníof), a doer, to do, or a deed. The word is sometimes pronounced griomh, whence grieve, a factor, bailiff, or agent.

Jenny sat jouking like a mouse,
But Jock was kneef as ony cock,
Says he to her, Haud up your brows,
And fa' to your meet.

—The Wooing o' Jenny and Jock.

Knowe, a hillock, a knoll.

Ca' the yowes [ewes] to the knowes.
—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Upon a knowe they sat them down,
And there began a long digression,
About the lords of the creation.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Knowe-head, the hill top.

Yon sunny knowe-head clad wi' bonnie wild flowers.—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Knurl, a dwarf; knurlin, a dwarf-ling, or very little dwarf.

The miller was 'strappin', the miller was ruddy—
A heart like a lord, and a hue like a lady,
The laird was a widdiefu' fleerit knurl— She's left the good fellow, and taken the churl.—BURNS: Meg o' the Mill.

Wee Pope, the knurlin, rives Horatian fame.—BURNS: On Pastoral Poetry.

These words are apparently derived from the English gnarl, twisted, knotted, as in the phrase, "the gnarled oak," and the Teutonic knorren, a knot, a wart, a protuberance. They were probably first applied in derision to hunch-backed people, not so much for their littleness as for their deformity. Burns, when speaking of Pope as a knurlin, seems to have had in memory the ill-natured comparison of that poet to a note of interrogation, because "he was a little crooked thing that asked questions."

Through an English misconception of the meaning of "a knurl" (pronounced exactly like "an earl"), arose the vulgar slang of the London streets used to insult a hunchback.

"My Lord" is a nickname given with mock humility to a hunchback.—HOTTEN'S Slang Dictionary.

Koff or coff, to buy; from the Teutonic kaufen, Flemish koop, to buy; whence by corruption horse-koofer, a dealer in horses.

Kindness comes wi' will; it canna be kofft.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Kute, coot, or queete, the ankle.

Cutes or kutes, according to Wright and Halliwell, is a Northern word for the feet. "To let one cool his cutes at the door (or in the lobby)," is a proverbial expression for letting a man wait unduly long in expectation of an interview. Cootie or kutie is a fowl whose legs are feathered. Cootikins, spatter-dashes or gaiters that go over the shoe and cover the ankle.

Your stockings shall be Narrow, narrow at the kutes,
And braid, braid at the braune
[the brawn or calf].
—CHAMBERS' Scottish Ballads.

The firsten step that she steppit in [the water],
She steppit to the kute.

The neisten step that she wade in,
She waded to the knee;
Said she, "I wad wade further in,
Gin my true love I could see."
—Willie and May Margaret.

It is difficult to trace the origin of this peculiarly Scottish word. The French call the ankle the "cheville du pied." Bescherelle defines cheville as "part of the two bones of the leg which rise in a boss or hump on each side of the foot." The Germans call the ankle the "knuckle of the foot." Jamieson derives cute from the Teutonic kyte, "sura;" but the Latin sura means the calf of the leg and not the ankle; and kyte is not to be found in any German or Teutonic dictionary. Kyte, in the Scottish vernacular, has nothing to do with kute, and signifies a part of the body far removed from the ankle, viz., the belly. Possibly the Swedish kut, a round boss or rising, as suggested in the extract from Bescherelle, may be the root of cute. The Gaelic affords no assistance to the discovery of the etymology. The word does not appear in the glossaries to Ramsay or Burns.

Kyle, a narrow strait of water between islands, or between an island and the mainland, as the Kyles of Bute, and Kyle Akin, between Skye and the continent of Scotland. The word is derived from the Gaelic caol, a narrow passage, a strait, whence Calais, the French town on the straits of Dover.

Kyte, the belly. Kytie, corpulent, big-bellied. The Gaelic cuid, victuals, food, has been suggested as the origin of the word, on the principle that to "have a long purse," signifies to have money, or much money, so that to have a kyte is to have food to put into it. But this etymology is not satisfactory, nor is that given by Jamieson from the Icelandic.

Then horn for horn, they stretch and strive—

Deil tak' the hindmost—on they drive,
Till a' their well-filled kytes belyve
Are stretched like drums.

—BURNS: To a Haggis.

But while the wife flate and gloom'd,
The tither cake wi' butter thoomb'd,
She forced us still to eat,

Till our wee kites were straughtit fou,
When wi' our hearties at our mou',
We felt maist like to greet.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: The Pentland Hills.

Kytke, to show or appear; and kythesome, of pleasant and prepossessing appearance. Jamieson has the phrase "blythsome and kythesome," used in Perthshire, and signifying, as he thinks, "happy in consequence of having abundance of property in cows." If he had remembered his own correct definition of kytke, "show, to be manifest," he would not in this instance have connected it with cows or kye, but would have translated the phrase, "blythe and pleasant of appearance."

Kytke is your ain colours, that folk may ken ye.—ALLAN RAMSAY.

L

Laigh, low, or low-down, short.

The higher the hill, the laigher the grass.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Dance aye laigh and late at e'en.
—BURNS: My Jo, Janet.

Laired, overthrown, cast to the ground. From the Gaelic lar, the ground; the English lair, as applied to the retreat of a wild animal; or possibly from lure, to entice or inveigle.

Laired by spunkies i' the mire.
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Lammas, the first day of August; supposed to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon hlaf, a loaf, but more probably from lamb, the Lamb of God. All the ancient festivals appropriated to particular days had an ecclesiastical origin—such as Mary-mass (now called Lady Day), from the Virgin Mary; Michaelmas, Hallowmas, Candlemas, Christmas, &c.

Landart, rural, in the country; from landward.

There was a jolly beggar,
And a begging he was boun',
And he took up his quarters
Into a landart town.
—Song: We'll Gang nae mair a Roving.

Then come away, and dinna stay,
What gars ye look sae landart?
I'd have ye run, and not delay,
To join my father's standard.
—COCKBURN: CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

Landlash, a great fall of rain, accompanied by a high wind. Jamieson is of opinion that this word is suggested by the idea that such a storm lashes the land. It is more probably from the Gaelic lan, full; and laiste, fury; whence lanlaiste (pronounced lanlashte, and abbreviated into lanlash), the storm in full fury. A lash of water signifies a great, heavy, or furious fall of rain.

Landlord and landlady. These words, commonly pronounced lanlord and lanlady, do not solely imply the proprietorship of land, as their constant application to the owners of public-houses, and to house-owners generally, as well as to women who merely let lodgings, are sufficient to show. The Scottish laird, without the prefix land, conveys the idea of proprietorship. Landlord and landlady, in one of the senses in which the words are continually used, both in English and Scottish parlance, are traceable not to land in the Teutonic sense of the word, but to lan, the Gaelic for full, or an enclosure, and all that it contains or is full of. Thus the keeper of a public, or the owner of a private house, is lord or master of the lan or enclosure which he occupies or possesses.

Land-louper, a vagabond, a wanderer from place to place without settled habitation; sometimes called a forloupin or forlopin, as in Allan Ramsay's "Evergreen."

Lane, alone, lone, or lonely; this word, which in the English lone or lonely is an adjective, is a noun in the Scottish lane. "I was all alone," or "we were all alone," are in Scottish, "I was a' my lane," and "we were a' our lane." "I canna lie my lane," is, "I cannot sleep alone."

I waited lang beside the wood,
Sae wae and weary a' my lane,
Och hey! Johnnie lad,
Ye're no so kind's ye should hae been.
—TANNAHILL.

"But oh, my master dear," he cried,
"In a green wood, ye're gude your lane."
—Ballad of Gil Morrice.

I wander my lane like a night-troubled ghaist.—BURNS.

Lanrien (sometimes written landrien). Jamieson defines this word as meaning "in a straight course; a direct, as opposed to a circuitous course," and quotes a phrase used in Selkirkshire—"He cam rinnin' landrien," or straight forward. It seems to be a corruption of the Gaelic lan, full, complete; and rian, order, method, arrangement, regularity.

Laroch or lerroch, the site of a building which has been demolished, but of which there are remains to prove what it once was. From the Gaelic lar, the ground or earth; and larach, the ground on which an edifice once stood.

Lave, the residue, the remainder, that which is left, or, as the Americans say in commercial fashion, the "balance."

We'll get a blessing wi' the lave,
And never miss't.

—BURNS: To a Mouse.

First when Maggie was my care,
Whistle o'er the lave o't.—BURNS.

Laverock, the lark. This word, so pleasant to the Scottish ear, and so entirely obsolete in English speech and literature, was used by Gower and Chaucer:—

She made many a wondrous soun',
Sometimes like unto the cock,
Sometimes like the laverock.

—GOWER: Quoted in HALLIWELL'S Archaic Dictionary.

Why should I sit and sigh,
When the wild woods bloom sae briery,
The laverocks sing, the flowerets spring,
And a' but me are cheery.

—BUCHAN'S Songs of the North of Scotland.

Thou Laverock that springs frae the dew
o' the lawn.—BURNS.

Lark and the Teutonic lerche are doubtless abbreviations of the primitive word laverock, but whence laverock? Possibly from the ancient Gaelic labhra (lavra), and labhraich, eloquent, loud—two epithets that are highly appropriate to the skylark.

Law. This word is often used in Scotland to signify a hill or rock, especially to one standing alone, as Berwick Law, so familiar by sight to the Mid-Lothian people. It is derived from the Gaelic leach, a stone; and leachach, the bare summit of a hill. It sometimes signifies the stony or shingly ground by the side of a river, as in the Broomie-law in Glasgow. Possibly in this case also the word is of the same derivation as leach, and means not only a high stone, but a flat stone, a flag stone, whence leachaig, to pave or lay with flat stones.

Lawin. This eminently Scottish word is from the Gaelic lachan, the expense of an entertainment; the price of the drink consumed at a tavern; lachag, a very small reckoning. "Ye're lawin-free," i.e., you are not to pay your share of the bill. The root of the word seems to be lagh, law, order, method—the law of the tavern, that the guests should pay before they go. It was formerly written lauch.

Aye as the gudewife brought in,
Ane scorit upon the wauch [wall],
Ane bade pay, anither said "Nay, Bide while we reckon our lauch."
—Pebbis to the Play.

Then, gudewife, count the lawin,
The lawin! the lawin!
Then, gudewife, count the lawin,
And bring a cogie mair.
—Burns: Old Chorus.

Lawin, the reckoning at an inn. Isn't reckoning a Scotticism? I doubt very much if you would be understood if you asked an English landlord for the reckoning, meaning an account of what you have had at his inn. I don't think reckoning is specially associated with an inn bill in this country. In Scotland reckoning has almost entirely superseded the word lawin. In Sweden the regular word for a hotel bill is the "reckoning."—R. DRENNAN.

Leal, loyal, true, true-hearted.
"The land o' the leal," i.e., Heaven.

A leal heart never lied.—Scots Proverbs.

I'm wearin' awa', Jean,
Like snaw when it's thaw, Jean,
I'm wearin' awa'
To the Land o' the Leal.
—LADY NAIRNE.

Robin of Rothesay, bend thy bow,
Thy arrows shoot so leal.
—Hardyknute.

Lear or leer, learning; from the German lehren.

When Sandie, Jock, and Jeanitie,
Are up and gotten lear,
They'll help to gar the boatie row
An' lighten a' our care.
—The Boatie Rows.

Lea-rig, a ridge in a corn or other field, left fallow between two ridges that are bearing grain.

Will ye gang o'er the lea-rig,
My ain kind dearie O.
—FERGUSSON.

Corn rigs and barley rigs,
And corn rigs are bonnie;
I'll ne'er forget that happy night,
Among the rigs wi' Annie.—BURNS.

Leed, a song or incantation, from the German lied, a lay or song.

Thrice backward round about she tottered,
While to hersel the leed she muttered.
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Lee-lang, as long as it is light, as in the phrase "the lee-lang day," which has hitherto been supposed to mean the "life-long day." It is more probably from the Gaelic li, a colour, and especially a bright colour, the colour of daylight, and from the allied word liath (lia), pale grey, as distinguished from dark or black.

The thresher's weary flingin' tree
The lee-lang day had tired me.

BURNS: The Vision.

Leeshin, lazily, in a dilatory manner. From the Gaelic leise, lazy.

And cam' leeshin up behind her.

—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Leesome, agreeable, pleasant, like the light. (See LEE-LANG.)

Oh, gear will buy me rigs o' land,
And gear will buy me sheep and kye;
But the tender heart o' leesome luvie
The gowd and siller canna buy.

—BURNS: The Countrie Lassie.

Fair and leesome blew the wind,
Ships did sail and boats did row.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

A fairy ballad in Buchan's collection is entitled "Leesome Brand." Jamieson derives leesome from the German liebe, love; perhaps, however, the root of the word is the Gaelic leus, light; li, colour; and leusach, bright, shining.

Leeze or leeze me on (a reflective verb), to be satisfied with, to be pleased or delighted with. A Gaelic periphrase for "I love." The Highlanders do not say "I love you," but "love is on me for you." Hence the Scottish phrase—"loes (or lees) me" or "love is on me."

Leeze me on my spinning-wheel.—BURNS.

Leeze me on thee, John Barleycorn,
Thou king o' grain.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Leeze me on drink, it gies us mair,
Than school or college.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Leglin or leglan, a milking-pail.

At buchts, in the mornin', nae blithe lads are scornin',

The lasses are lanely, and dowie and
wae,

Nae daffin', nae gabbin', but sighin' and sabbin',—

Ilk ane lifts her leglin and hies her away.

—ELLIOT: The Flowers of the Forest.

Donald Caird can lilt and sing,
Blithely dance the Highland fling,
Hoop a leglan, clout a pan,
Or crack a pow wi' ony man.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Donald Caird.

Jamieson traces leglin to the Teutonic leghel. This word, however, has no place in German, Dutch, or Flemish dictionaries. The Gaelic has leig, to milk a cow, which, with lion, a receptacle (also a net), or lion, to fill, becomes leglin in Lowland Scotch.

Leister, a three-pronged instrument, or trident, for killing fish in the water; commonly applied to illegal salmon fishing in the rivers of Scotland.

I there wi' something did forgather
That pat me in an eerie swither,
An awfu' scythe out owre ae shoulther
Clear dangling hang,
A three-taed leister on the ither
Lay large and lang.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Donald Caird can wire a maukin (a hare),
Leisters kipper, makes a shift
 To shoot a moor-fowl i' the lift.
 Water-bailiffs, rangers, keepers,
 He can wake when they're sleepers;
 Not for bountitt or reward,
 Dare they mell wi' Donald Caird.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Jamieson traces the word to the Swedish liustra, to strike fish with a trident. But the derivation may be doubted. "To leister," says the Gaelic Etymology of the Languages of Western Europe, "is a mode of taking salmon at night, by attracting them towards the surface by torches held near the water, and then driving a spear, trident, or large fork into them. The word is derived from the light that is employed to lure the fish, rather than from the spear that impales them, and is traceable to the Gaelic leasdair, a light, or a lustre." It seems probable that the word is of home origin, rather than of Swedish. Halliwell and Wright claim it as a common word in the North of England. Burns evidently uses it in the sense of a trident, without any reference to the illegal practice of fishing.

Lemanry; from leman, a concubine; a poetical word for harlotry.

Oh, wed and marry, the knight did say,
 For your credit and fame,
 Lay not your love on lemanry,
 Nor bring a good woman to shame.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: Hynd Horn.

Let on, to let appear; loot, appeared; luten, the past-participle of let.

"Weel, Margaret," said a minister to an auld wife, who expressed her dissatisfaction with him for leaving the parish, "ye ken I'm the Lord's servant. If He have work for me in Stirling, ye'll admit that it's my duty to perform it." "Hech!" replied Margaret, "I've heard that Stirling has a great muckle stipend, and I'm thinking if the Lord had gi'en ye a ca' to Auchtertool [a very poor parish], ye wad ne'er hae luten on that ye heard Him."—ROGERS: Anecdotes of Scottish Wit and Humour.

Leure, a ray of light, a gleam; from the French lueur, a shining light; and the anterior Gaelic root lur, brightness, splendour, treasure. The Gipsy slang has lowere, money; and gammy [or crooked] lowere, bad money. The ideas of brightness and beauty go together in most languages. Lurach, in Gaelic, is a term of endearment for a beautiful—that is, a bright—young woman.

Levin, the lightning. This word, that has long been obsolete in English literature, is not yet obsolete in the Scottish vernacular. It was employed with fine effect, centuries ago, by Dunbar, the Scottish, and by Chaucer, the English poet. Attempts have recently been made to revive it, by Sir Walter Scott and others, not altogether ineffectually. Chaucer makes splendid use of it when he denounces one who habitually speaks ill of women:

With wild thunder-bolt and fiery levin
May his welked [wicked] neck be broke.

—Wife of Bath's Prologue.

To him as to the burning levin,
Short, resistless course was given.

—SCOTT: Marmion.

The clouds grew dark and the wind grew loud,

And the levin filled her e'e,

And waesome wailed the snow-white sprites
Upon the gurlie sea.

—LAIDLAW: The Demon Lover.

The etymology is obscure,
There is no trace of it in the Teutonic or Latin sources of the language. Spencer, in the "Faerie Queene," has—

His burning levin-brand in hand he took.

The etymology is probably to be found in the Gaelic liath (pronounced lia, lee-a) meaning white or grey, and sometimes vivid white, which may perhaps account for the first syllable.
Buin, to shoot, to dart; buinne, or bhuinne (vuin), signifies a rapid motion, which may account for the second—a derivation which is not insisted upon, but which may lead philologists to inquire further.

Lewder, lewdering, to flounder through bog and mire, to plod wearily and heavily on.

Thus lewdering on Through scrubs and crags wi' mony a heavy groan.

—ROSS's Helenore.

Jamieson derives the word from the Teutonic leuteren, morari, a word which is not to be found in the Teutonic Dictionaries. It is probable that the root is the Gaelic laidir, strong, heavy. The English slang, "To give one a good leathering," is to give him a strong or heavy beating.

Lib, to castrate, geld, Libbet, an animal on which that operation has been performed; a eunuch.
This word still remains current in the Northern Counties. In Flemish lubbing signifies castration; and lubber, he who performs the operation. Burns speaks contemptuously of Italian singers as libbet :—

How cut-throat Prussian blades were hinging,

How libbet Italy was singing.

Lightly or lightly, to treat with neglect or scorn, or speak lightly of anybody.

I leaned my back unto an aik,

And thought it was a trusty tree,

But first it bowed, and syne it brak,

Sae my true love did lightly me.

—Ballad of the Marchioness of Douglas.

Oh is my helmet a widow's cuid [cap],

Or my lance a wand of the willow tree,

Or my arm a lady's lily hand

That an English Lord should lightly me.

—Kinmont Willie.

Aye vow and protest that ye care na for me,
And whiles ye may lightly my beauty a wee;

But court na anither tho' daffin' ye be,

For fear that she wyle your fancy frae me.

—BURNS: Whistle and I'll come to you, my Lad.

Liddisdale drow, Liddisdale dew;
the fine rain that is said not to wet a Scotsman, but that drenches an Englishman to the skin. Jamieson defines drow to mean a cold mist heavy with rain, also a squall or severe gust; and derives the word from the Gaelic drog, the motion of the sea, which, however, is not to be found in Gaelic dictionaries. Drow is from the Gaelic druchd, with the elision of the guttural, signifying dew, hence the Liddisdale joke.

Lift, the sky; from the Teutonic luft.

When lightnings fire the stormy lift.

—BURNS: Epistle to Robert Graham.

Is yon the moon, I ken her horn,
She's glintin' i' the lift sae heigh,
She smiles sae sweet to wile us hame,
But by my troth she'll bide a wee.

—BURNS.

Lil for lal, an ancient Scottish synonym for the English tit for tat, that appears in Wynton, who wrote in the sixteenth century. It is supposed by Jamieson to be from the Anglo-Saxon "lael with laele," or stripe for stripe, though it may be of Gaelic origin; from li, light or colour; and là, day, and lathail (la-aill) daily; or li-la, for day, or one light for another.

Lilt, to sing cheerfully, or in a lively manner. Also, according to Jamieson, a large pull in drinking frequently repeated.

Nae mair liltin' at the ewe-milkin',
The flowers of the forest are a' wede awa'.

—Lament for the Battle of Flodden.

Mak' haste an' turn King David owre,
An' lilt wi' holy clangour.

—BURNS: The Ordination.

The origin of this word seems to be the Gaelic luailte, speed, haste, rapid motion, and luailtich, to accelerate, to move merrily and rapidly forward. This derivation would explain the most common acceptance of the word, as applied to singing, as well as the secondary meaning attributed to it by Jamieson.

Limmer, a depreciatory epithet for a woman; from the Gaelic leum, to leap—one who leaps over the bounds of propriety or moderation, or breaks through the bounds of the seventh commandment.

Linder, a short linen jacket or vest worn next to the skin by both sexes, though Jamieson says only by old women and children.

He'll sell his jerkin for a groat,

His linder for another o't,

And ere he want to pay his shot

His sark will pay the t'other o't.

—ALEXANDER ROSS: The Bridal o't.

Link, to trip, to leap, to skip, to jump; linkin', tripping; from the Gaelic leum, to leap, leum-nach, skipping, jumping, whence leumanach, a frog, a creature that jumps. The glossaries to Burns render this word by "trip." Jamieson says it means to walk smartly, or to do anything with cleverness and expedition.

And coost her duddies to the wark,
And linkit at it in her sark.

—BURNS: Tam O'Shanter.

And now, auld Cloots, I ken ye're thinkin'
A certain Bardie's rantin', drinkin',
Some luckless hour will send him linkin'
To your black pit,
But faith! he'll turn a corner jinkin'
[dodging],
And cheat you yet.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Lin or lins. This termination to many Scottish words supplies a shade of meaning not to be expressed in English but by a periphrasis, as westlins, inclining towards the west. Aiblins—perhaps, for able-lins—inclining towards being able, or about to become possible (see AIBLINS, ante). Backlins, inclining towards a retrograde movement.

The westlin winds blaw loud and shrill.
—BURNS: My Nannie, O.

Now frae the east neuk o' Fife the dawn
Speel'd westlins up the lift.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: Christ's Kirk on the Green.

And if awakened fiercelins, aff night flee.
—ROSS's Helena.

This termination properly is lings, and is a very common termination in several Teutonic dialects, such as the Dutch, and still more, the German, though not common in English. See Grimm's Grammar.
—LORD NEAVES.

Lins corresponds nearly to the English affix ly, though not exactly. In Pittscottie's account of the apparition that appeared to James IV. in St. Catherine's Aisle of the Church at Linlithgow, the word Grofflins occurs. This has been interpreted to mean gruffly. "He leaned down grofflins on the desk before him (the king) and said," &c. Grufe or groff is a common Scotch word, meaning the belly, or rather the front of the body, as distinguished from the back; and Pittscottie's expression means nothing more than that the apparition leaned the fore part of his body, say his breast, upon the back of the desk at which the king was kneeling.—R. DRENNAN.

Linn, a waterfall; Cora Linn, the falls of the Clyde; properly, the pool at the bottom of a cataract, worn deep by the falling water; from the Gaelic linne, a pool.

Grat his e'en baith bleer't and blin',
Spak o' lowpin' o'er a linn.

—BURNS: Duncan Gray.

Ye burnies, wimplin' down your glens,
Or foaming strang frae linn to linn.

—BURNS: Elegy on Captain Matthew Henderson.

Whiles owre a linn the burnie plays.
—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Lintie, a linnet.

Nae linties lilt on hedge or bush,
Poor things, they suffer sairly.
Up in the mornin' no for me,
Up in the mornin' early;
When a' the hills are covered wi' snaw,
I'm sure it's winter fairly.

—Old Song, modernised by JOHN HAMILTON.

Dr. Norman Macleod mentioned a conversation he had with a Scottish emigrant in Canada, who in general terms spoke favourably of his position in his adopted country. "But oh! sir," he said, "there are no linties in the woods, and no braes like Yarrow." The word lintie conveys to my mind more of tenderness and endearment towards the little bird than linnet.—DEAN RAMSAY.

Lippen, to incline towards, to be favourable to any one, to rely upon, to trust. Apparently from the Flemish liejde, and the German lieben, love.

Lippen to me, but look to yourself.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

An ancient lady, when told by the minister that he had a call from his Lord and Master to go to another parish, replied, "Deed, sir, the Lord might ha' ca'd and ca'd to you lang enuch, and ye'd ne'er hae lipped till Him if the steeplen [stipend] had na been better."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Lippin' fu', full up to the lip or brim of a glass or goblet, brimful; owre-lippin', full to overflow.

A' the laughin' valleys round
Are nursed and fed by me,
And I'm aye lippin' fu'.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: Song of the Four Elements—the Water.

See ye, wha hae aught in your bicker to spare,
And gie your poor neighbours your owre-lippin' share.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: Winter Promptings.

Lire, sometimes written lyre, the complexion. Jamieson defines lire as "the part of the skin which is colourless," and "as the flesh or muscles as distinguished from the bones"—"the lean part of butchers' meat." He derives the word from the Anglo-Saxon lire, the fleshy part of the body. The word is traceable to the Gaelic liath (pronounced lia), pale grey, and liathaich (lia-aich), to become grey.

As ony rose her rude was red,
Her lyre was like the lilies.

—Christ's Kirk on the Green.

Lirk, a crease, a plait, a fold, a hollow in a hill; from the Gaelic laraich (see lar, ante, p. 114).

The hills were high on ilka side,
An' the bricht i' the lirk.

—Border Minstrelsy—The Broom o' the Cowdenknowes.

Lith, a joint, a hinge; and metaphorically, the point of an argument on which the whole question turns. To lith, to separate the joints; from the Gaelic luth, a joint; luthach, well-jointed, or having large joints.

"Fye, thief, for shame!" cries little Sym,
"Wilt thou not secht wi' me;
Thou art mair large of lith and limb
Nor I am" —

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Evergreen: Questioning and Debate betwixt Adamson and Sym.

And to the road again wi' a' her pith,
And souple was she ilka limb and lith.

—Ross's Helenore.

Dr. Johnson and Lord Auchinleck were quarrelling over the character of the great Protector, and the sturdy old English Tory pressed the no less sturdy old Scottish Whig to say what good Cromwell had ever done to his country. His lordship replied, "He gart kings ken that they had a lith in their necks."—BOSWELL.

Ye'll tak a lith o' my little fingerbane.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads—The Bonnie Bows o' London.

Littit, coloured; from the Gaelic liath, grey.

Weel dyed and littit through and through,
—GEORGE BRATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Loaning, a meadow, a pasture; a green lane.

I've heard them liltin' at the ewe-milking—
Lasses a' liltin' before dawn of day;
But now they are moaning in ilka green loanin',

The flowers o' the forest are a' wele away.

—The Flowers o' the Forest.

Joy gaed down the loanin' wi' her,
Joy gaed down the loanin' wi' her,
She wadna hae me—but has ta'en another—
And a' men's joy but mine ga'd wi' her!

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

Loe-some, or love-some, pleasant and amiable, is sometimes wrongly written leesome, as in Burns's song of "The Countrie Lassie":—

The tender heart o' leesome luvie
Gowd and siller canna buy.

Loof, the palm of the hand; from the Gaelic lamh (lav), the hand.

Gie's yer loof, I'll ne'er beguile you.
—Scots Proverbs.

Wi' arm reposd on her chair back,
He sweetly does compose him,
Which by degrees slips round her neck,
An's loof upon her bosom,
Unkennd that day.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Lofa is used by Ulphilas for the open hand; slaps lofa, a slap of the hand. The Gaelic lam, when the m gets aspirate, becomes lamh—lav or laf.—LORD NEAVES.

Losh, a ludicrous objurgation that does duty as a paltry oath; generally supposed to be a corruption of "Lord!"

Losh me! hae mercy wi' your natch,
Your bodkin's bauld.

—BURNS: Epistle to a Tailor.

Losh me! that's beautiful.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

The English corruptions of "Lord!" becomes O Lor'! Lawks! and O La'! The name of the Supreme Being, in like manner, is vulgarised into Gosh, as "By Gosh!" "Gosh guide us!" is a common expression in Scotland, with the object apparently of avoiding the breach of the Third Commandment in the letter, though not in the spirit.

Loup, to leap; to "loup the dyke," a proverbial expression, to leap over the dyke (of restraint), applied to unchaste unmarried women; land-louper, a vagrant.

Spak o' loupin' o'er a linn.

—BURNS: Duncan Gray.

He's loupin on the bonnie black,
He steer'd him wi' the spur right sairly;
But ere he won to Gatehope slack

I think the steed was wae and weary.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border—Annan Water.

I bade him loup, I bade him come,

I bade him loup to me,

An' I'd catch him in my armis twa.

—The Fire o' Frendraught.

Loup-hunting. "The odd phrase, 'Hae ye been a loup-hunting?' is a query," says Jamieson, "addressed to one who has been very early abroad, and is an evident allusion to the hunting of the wolf (the French loup in former days)." The allusion is not so evident as Jamieson imagined. A wolf was not called loup either in the Highlands or in the Lowlands. In the Highlands the animal was either called faol, or (madadh alluidh), a wild dog; and in the Lowlands by its English, Flemish, and German name, "wolf." It is far more likely that "loup" in the phrase is derived from the Gaelic lobhar, the Irish Gaelic lubhar, a day's work; a hunt more imperative than that after an animal which has not been known in Scotland since 1680, when the last of the race, according to tradition, was killed by Sir Ewen Cameron of Lochiel. Another tradition, recorded in the third volume of Chambers's "Annals of Scotland," fixes in 1743 the date of the last wolf slain, and records the name of the slayer as Macqueen, a noted deer-stalker in the forest of Moray. Lub is an obsolete Gaelic word for a youth of either sex. It is therefore possible that loup-hunting may have had a still more familiar meaning.

Lout or loute, to jump, or leap.

He has louted him o'er the dizzy crag
And gien the monster kisses ane.

—Border Minstrelsy.

Low, to stand still, to stop, to rest; lowden, to calm; applied to the cessation of a stormy wind; also, to silence, or cause to be silent.

Lowan drouth, burning thirst.

With the cauld stream she quench'd her lowan drouth.—Ross's Helenore.

Lowe, a flame; lowin', burning, to burn, to blaze. Lò is the ancient Gaelic word for day, or daylight; superseded partially by the modern là, or làtha, with the same meaning. The syllable lè appears in the compound word lo-inn, joy, gladness, beauty—derived from the idea of light—that which shines, as in the Teutonic sehön or schoen, the old English sheen, beautiful.

A vast unbottomed boundless pit,
Filled fou o' lowin' brunstane.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

The sacred lowe o' weel-placed love
Luxuriantly indulge it.

—BURNS: Epistle to a Young Friend.

The bonnie, bonnie bairn sits poking in the ase,
Glowerin' in the fire wi' his wee round
face,
Laughin' at the fuffin' lowe—what sees he there?
Ha! the young dreamer's biggin' castles in the air.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Lown, quiet, calm, sheltered from the wind. The lown o' the dyke, the sheltered side of the wall.

"Unbuckle your belt, Sir Roland," she said,

"And sit you safely down."

"Oh, your bower is very dark, fair maid,
An' the night is wondrous lown."

—Ballad of Sir Roland.

Lown is used in relation to concealment, as when any ill report is to be hushed up. "Keep it lown," i.e., say nothing about it.
—JAMIESON.

Blaw the wind ne'er sae fast,
It will lown at the last.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Come wi' the young bloom o' morn on thy brow,

Come wi' the lown star o' love in thine e'e.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: Wife, Come Hame.

Lounder, to strike heavily right and left.

I brak a branch off an ash, and ran in among them lounderin' awa' right and left.
—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Luckie, a term of familiarity applied to elderly women in the lower and middle ranks of society:—

Oh, haud your tongue, now, Luckie
Laing,

Oh, haud your tongue and jaumer;

I held the gate till you I met,
Syne I began to wander.

—BURNS: The Lass of Ecclefechan.

Hear me, ye hills, and every glen,
And echo shrill, that a' may ken
The wae fu' thud
O' reckless death wha came unseen
To Luckie Wood.

—BURNS.

Mrs. Helen Carnegie of Montrose died in 1818, at the advanced age of ninety-one. She was a Jacobite, and very aristocratic, but on social terms with many of the burghers of the city. She preserved a very nice distinction in her mode of addressing people according to their rank and station. She was fond of a game of quadrille (whist), and sent out her servant every morning to invite the ladies required to make up the game. "Nelly, ye'll gang to Lady Carnegie's, and mak' my compliments, and ask the honour of her ladyship's company, and that of the Miss Carnegies, to tea this evening. If they canna come, ye'll gang to the Miss Mudies, and ask the pleasure of their company." If they canna come, ye maun gang to Miss Hunter, and ask the favour of her company. If she canna come, ye maun gang to Luckie Spark, and bid her come!"—DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

It is probable that this word, as a term of respect as well as of familiarity, to a middle-aged or elderly matron, is a corruption of the Gaelic laoch, brave. The French say, "une brave femme," meaning a good woman; and the Lowland Scotch use the adjective honest in the same sense, as in the anecdote recorded in Dean Ramsay's "Reminiscences" of Lord Hermand, who, about to pass sentence on a woman, began remonstratively, "Honest woman, what garred ye steal your neighbour's tub?"

Lug, the ear, a handle; also to pull, to drag or haul. Luggie, a small wooden dish with handles. Luggie, the horned owl, so called from the length of its ears.

His hair, his size, his mouth, his lugs,
Showed he was nane o' Scotland's dogs.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Up they got and shook their lugs,
Rejoiced they were na men but dogs.

—Idem.

How would his Highland lug been nobler fired,

—His matchless hand with finer touch inspired.

—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Lug, to pull by the ear, or otherwise to haul a load, is still current in English; but lug, the ear, is obsolete, except in the Northern Counties, though common in English literature in the Elizabethan era. Two derivations have been suggested for the word in its two divergences. The Gaelic lag, genitive luig, signifies a cavity, whence it is supposed that lug signifies the cavity of the ear. Coles, however, renders lug by the Latin, "auris lobus, auricula infinia," not the interior cavity, but the exterior substance of the ear. The derivation of lug, to pull, to drag a load, seems to be from another source altogether; from the Gaelic luchd—the English for a load, a burden, or a ship's cargo, and for lugger, a kind of barge used for the transference of the cargo from the hold of a larger vessel. In this case the meaning is transferred from the load itself to the action of moving it.

Lum, the chimney, the vent by which the smoke escapes from the fireplace. The word is used in the north of England as well as in Scotland. The etymology is uncertain. The Kymric has llumon, a beacon, a chimney; the Irish Gaelic has luaimh, swift; and the Scottish Gaelic luath (lua), swift; and ceum, aspirated into cheum or heum, a way, a passage, whence lua-heum, the swift passage by which the smoke is carried off.

The most probable derivation is from the Gaelic laom, a blaze; whence, by extension of meaning, the place of the blaze or fire.

Lume, a tool, a spinning-machine, a loom.

Lunch, a piece, a slice, whence the modern English lunch, a slight meal in the middle of the day.

Cheese and bread frae women's laps
Was dealt about in lunches

And dawds that day.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Lunt, the smoke of tobacco, to emit smoke; from the Flemish lont, a lighted wick.

The luntin' pipe.

—BURNS: The Twa Dogs.

Lurder, an awkward, lazy, or worthless person; from the French lourd, heavy; lourdaud, a heavy and stupid man.

Let alane maks many a lurder (neglect makes many a one worthless).—DEAN RAMSAY.

Lyart, grey; from the Gaelic liath (lia), which has the same meaning.

His lyart haffets [locks of thin grey hair].

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Twa had manteels o' doleful black,
But ane in lyart hung.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Lyke-wake, the ceremonial of the watching over a dead body. Lyke is from the German leiche, the Dutch and Flemish lijk, a corpse.

She has cut off her yellow locks

A little aboon her e'e,

And she's awa' to Willie's lyke,

As fast as gang could she.

—BUCHAN'S Ballads: Willie's Lyke-Wake.

M

Machless, lazy, sluggish, indolent. Jamieson derives this word from the Teutonic macht, power, strength, might; whence machtlos, without might or strength; but the Scottish word is without the t, which somewhat detracts from the probability of the etymology. The Gaelic has macleisg, a lazy, indolent person, literally a "son of laziness," which is a nearer approach to machless than machtlos. Machle is defined by Jamieson as signifying to busy one's self about nothing, which would seem to be an abbreviation of maclieag. He says that machless is generally used in an unfavourable sense, as in the phrase, "get up, ye machless brute." This supports the Gaelic etymology.

Mad as a hatter. This is English as well as Scottish slang, to signify that a person is more or less deranged in his intellect. Why a hatter should be madder than a shoemaker, a tailor, or any other handicraftsman, has never been explained. The phrase most probably arises from a corruption and misconception of the Gaelic word atadh, a swelling, aitearachd, swelling, blustering, foaming like a cataract in motion, or the assembling of a noisy crowd. Jamieson, unaware of the Gaelic origin, defined the Scottish hatter as a numerous and irregular assemblage of any kind, a hatter of stanes, or a confused heap of stones; and hattering, as collecting in crowds. So that mad as a hatter merely signifies mad as a cataract or a crowd. In the old Langue Romane—the precursor of modern French—hativeau meant un fou, un etourdi, a madman.

Maggie-rab or Maggie-rob, an ancient popular term for a violent, quarrelsome, and disagreeable woman.

He's a very guid man, but I trow he's gotten a Maggie-rob o' a wife.—JAMIESON.

This strange phrase, though now so apparently inexplicable, must originally have had a meaning, or it would never have acquired the currency of a proverb. If the word Maggie for Margaret be accepted as the generic name for a woman, like Jill in the nursery rhyme of "Jack and Jill went up the hill;" or like Jenny in the old song of "Jock and Jenny;" and Rob or Rab be held to signify a man, the phrase may mean a virago, a woman with the behaviour and masculine manners of the other sex.

The rab or rob in the phrase is susceptible of another interpretation. The Gaelic rab, or rabach, means quarrelsome, litigious, violent, exasperating—while in the same language rob means dirty and slovenly. Either of these epithets would very aptly describe the kind of woman referred to in the extract from Jamieson.

But these are suggestions only for students of language, and are not offered as true derivations for the guidance of the unlearned. Rabagas was the name recently given by a popular French playwright to a very quarrelsome and litigious character.

Maigs or mags, a ludicrous term for the hands, from the Gaelic mog or mog, a paw.

Haud aff yer maigs, man!—JAMIESON.

Mailin', a farm-yard and farm-buildings; a farm for which rent is paid—from mail, a tax. Gaelic mal, tax, tribute.

A weel-stockit mailin', himself o't the laird,
And marriage off-hand, were his proffers.

—BURNS: Last May a Braw Wooer.

Quoth she, my grandsire left me gowd,
A mailin' plenished fairly.

—BURNS: The Soldier's Return.

Mairly, rather more.

Argyle has raised a hundred men,
A hundred men and mairly,
And he's awa by the back o' Dunkeld,
To plunder the house o' Airly.

The lady look't o'er her windowsae hie,
She lookit lang and sairly,
Till she espied the great Argyle
Cam' to plunder the house o' Airly.

—The House of Airly.

Maks na, or it maks na, it does not signify, it does not matter.

Away his wretched spirit flew,
It maks na where.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Last Speech of a Wretched Miser.

Tho' daft or wise, I'll ne'er demand,
Or black or fair, it maks na whether.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: Gie me a Lass wi' a Lump o' Land.

Malison, a curse. The twin word, benison, a blessing, has been admitted into English dictionaries, but malison is still excluded; although it was a correct and recognised English word in the time of Langland, the author of Piers Ploughman, and Chaucer.

Thus they serve Sathanas, Marchands of malisons.

—LANGLAND: Piers Ploughman.

And all-Hallowes, have ye, Sir Chanone,
Said this priest, and I her malison.

—CHAUCER: The Chanones Yemanne's Tale.

I've won my mother's malison,
Coming this night to thee.

—Border Minstrelsy.

That is a cuckold's malison,
John Anderson, my joe.

—John Anderson, old version.

Mansweir, to commit perjury.

This word is almost peculiar to Scotland, though Halliwell has mansworn, perjured, long obsolete, but once used in England. The first syllable can have no relation to man, homo. The Flemish meineed, and the German meineid, signify perjury, and one who perjures himself is a meineidiger. The Scottish word seems to be derived from the Gaelic mionn, an oath, and suarach, worthless, valueless, mean, of no account—whence mionn suarach, corrupted into man sweir, signifying a valueless or false oath. Jamieson thinks it comes from the Anglo-Saxon man, perverse, mischievous, and swearian, to swear; a derivation which, as regards the syllable man, he would have scarcely hazarded if he had been aware of the Gaelic mionn, or of the German meineid.

Mare's Nest. This originally Scottish phrase is no longer peculiar to Scotland, but has become part of the copious vocabulary of English slang. Hotten's Slang Dictionary defines it to mean "a supposed discovery of marvels, which turn out to be no marvels at all." The compiler accounts for the expression by an anecdote of "three cockneys, who, out ruralising, determined to find out something about nests. Ultimately, when they came upon a dung-heap, they judged by the signs that it must be a mare's nest, especially as they could see the mare close by." This ridiculous story has hitherto passed muster. The words are a corruption of the Gaelic mearachd, an error, and nathaist (th silent), a fool, whence a fool's error, i.e., mare's nest. Some Gaelic scholars are of opinion that the word is compounded of mearachd, an error, and sna-saichte, or snasta, reduced into order or system, i.e., systematic error.

Mark and burn. To say of a thing that it is lost, mark and burn signifies that it is totally lost, beyond trace and recognition; not that it is marked or burned in the sense of the English words, but in the sense of the Gaelic marc, a horse—from whence march, a boundary traced by the perambulations at stated periods of men on horseback—and burn, a stream of running water, the natural, and often the common boundary, between contiguous estates and territories. March balk signifies the narrow ridge which sometimes serves as the boundary between lands of different proprietors. March dyke, a wall separating one farm or estate from another.

When one loses anything and finds it not again, he is said never to see mark nor burn of it.—JAMIESON.

Marmor, an ancient title of nobility equivalent to an earl; from the Gaelic maor, an officer, chieftain, and mor, great.

Lords of the Isles, and Thanes, and Jarls,
Barons and Marmors grim,
With helm on head and glaive in hand,
In rusty armour dim,
Responsive to some powerful call,
Gathered obedient one and all.

—Legends of the Isles.

Marrow, one of a pair, a mate, a companion, an equal, a sweetheart—from the Gaelic mar, like, similar. This word is beautifully applied to a lover or wedded partner, as one whose mind is the exact counterpart of that of the object of his affection. It appears in early English literature, but now survives only in the poetry and daily speech of the Scottish and northern English people.

One glove or shoe is marrow to another.—Lansdowne MS., quoted in HALLIWELL'S Archaic Dictionary.

And when we came to Clovenford,
Then said my winsome marrow,
Whate'er betide, we'll turn aside,
And see the braes o' Yarrow.

—WORDSWORTH: Yarrow Unvisited.

Thou took our sister to be thy wife,
But ne'er thought her thy marrow.

—The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow.

Mons Meg and her marrow three volleys let flee,

For love of the bonnets of bonnie Dundee.—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Meddle with your marrow (i.e., with your equal).—Scottish Proverb.

Your e'en are no marrows (i.e., you squint).—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Marschal, a steward, an upper servant; from the Gaelic maor, an officer, a superintendent, and sgalag, a farm-servant, a serf, a hired labourer.

Mart or mairt, cow-beef salted for winter provision. So called, says Jamieson, "from Martinmas, the term at which beeves are usually killed for winter store." Perhaps the future editors of Jamieson will take note that mart in Gaelic signifies a cow; mart bainne, a milch cow; and mart fheoil, beef; and that consequently the word has no relation to the Martinmas festival. In a note to "Noctes Ambrosianæ," Professor Ferrier says mart is an ox killed at Martinmas. Mart originally signified a market, where kine and horned cattle were sold, as distinguished from market, a horse fair; from mare, a horse.

Mashlum, mixed corn, or rye and oats with the bran.

Twa mashlum bannocks (cakes).
—BURNS: Cry and Prayer.

Mask, to infuse; usually employed in connection with the tea-table. To mask the tea is, in Scottish phrase, to make the tea, by pouring the boiling water upon it. The word is from the Gaelic masg, to mix, to infuse. Jamieson erroneously derives it from the Swedish mask, a mash.

Maughts, power.

They had nae maughts for sic a toilsome task,
The barefaced robbers had put off the mask—
Among the herds that played a maughty part.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

She starts to foot, but has nae maughts to stand.—Idem.

The word is from the Teutonic macht, power, might, ability. The root seems to be the Gaelic maith, powerful, able, strong, and maithich or maithaich, to make strong.

Maukin, a hare; from the Gaelic maigheach, and maoidheach, with the same meaning.

God help the day when royal heads
Are hunted like a maukin.

—BURNS: Our Thistles flourished Fresh and Fair.

Mauks, maggots.

I saw the cook carefully wi' the knife
scrapin' out the mauks.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Maun, must. This Scottish verb, like its English synonym, has no inflections, no past or future tense, and no infinitive. The peculiarity of the Scottish word is that it sometimes signifies may, and sometimes must, as in the line of D'Urfey's clumsy imitation of a Scottish song, "Within a Mile of Edinburgh Town"—

I canna, maunna, winna buckle to (I cannot, may not [or must not], will not, be married).

Perhaps the use of may as must, and vice versa, was introduced into the Lowland Scotch by the Gaelic-speaking Highlanders. Feud in Gaelic signifies may or can, and sheudar domh, "obligation or necessity is to me, or upon me," i.e., I must.

Mavis, the singing thrush. This word, once common in English poetry, is now seldom employed. Spenser, in the following passage from his "Epithalamium," seems to have considered the mavis and the thrush to be different birds:—

The thrush replies; the mavis descant plays.

In Scottish poetry the word is of constant occurrence.

In vain to me in glen or shaw
The mavis and the lintwhite sing.

—BURNS.

Oh, tell sweet Willie to come down,
And hear the mavis singing;
And see the birds on ilka bush,
And green leaves round them hinging.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

An eccentric divine discoursing on a class of persons who were obnoxious to him, concluded with this singular peroration, "Ma freens, it is as impossible for a moderate to enter into the kingdom of heaven as for a soo (sow) to sit on the tap o' a thistle, and sing like a mavis."—ROGERS'S Illustrations of Scottish Life.

Mawmet, an idol. This word is usually derived from Mahomet, but as Mahomet was not an idol, but asserted himself to be the prophet of the true God, it is possible that the philologists of an earlier day accepted the plausible etymology, without caring to inquire further. It is, nevertheless, worthy of consideration whether the word does not come from the Gaelic maoin, horror, terror, fright; and maimeadh, a state of terror or awe, such as devotees feel before an idol.

Mawsie, a large, dirty, slovenly, unshapely woman; a corruption and abbreviation of the Gaelic maosganach, a lump, a lumpish person.

May, a lass, a maid, a young girl.

There was a May an' a weel-farèd May Lived high up in yon glen.

—Border Minstrelsy: Katharine Ganfarie.

Meggy Monyfeet, the popular name for the centipede.

Mell, to be intimate with, to mingle or associate; from the French mèler, to mix. Mell also signifies a company, and melling an intermeddling.

Melder, the quantity of grain sent at one time to the miller to be ground.

Ae marker-day thou wast na sober;
That ilka melder, wi' the miller,
Thou sat as lang as thou hadst siller;
That every naig was ca'd a shoe on
The smith and thee gat roarin' fou' on.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Melvie, to soil with meal, as the miller's clothes and hair are soiled from the flying dust of the mill. Erroneously explained in the glossaries to Burns as "to soil with mud." It is probably a corruption of mealie.

Mealie was his sark,
Mealie was his siller,
Mealie was the kiss
 That I gat frae the miller.
 —Old Song.

To melvie his brow claithing.
 —Burns: The Holy Fair.

Mense, mind, good manners, dignity, decorum; menseful, dignified; mensefully, in a proper and respectable manner. From the Latin mens, whence mental.

Auld Vandal, ye but show your little mense,
 Just much about it wi' your scanty sense.
 —Burns: The Brigs of Ayr.

I wat she was a sheep of sense,
 And could behave herself wi' mense;
 I'll say't, she never brak a fence
 Thro' thievish greed.

Our Bardie lanely keeps the spence
 Since Mailie's dead.
 —Burns: Poor Mailie's Elegy.

To mense a board, is to do the honours of the table.

She has a' the mense o' the family.—
 JAMIESON.

Mensk, manly dignity; menskful, manly, becoming, dignified; menskly, worthily. Jamieson traces the word to the Icelandic menska, humanitas.

Merg or mergh, marrow pith; from the Flemish.

There was merg in his fingers and fire in his eye.—Jock o' Arnka.

And the mergh o' his shin-bane,
 Has run down on his spur leather whang.
 —Border Minstrelsy: Fray of Suport.

Merle, the blackbird. The Scottish, which is also the French, name for this delightful songster is far more poetical and distinctive than the prosaic "blackbird" of modern English—a name which might with as much propriety be applied to the rook, the crow, the raven, and the jackdaw. The merle is as much noted for his clear, beautiful notes, as for the tribute he levies upon the fruits of the summer and autumn—a tribute which he well deserves to obtain, and amply pays for by his music. The name of merle, in Gaelic meirle, signifies theft; and meirleach, a thief. In the same language meirneil, the English merlin, signifies a hawk or other predatory bird. As regards the merle, it must be confessed that he is, in the matter of currants and strawberries, deserving of his name. The depredations of the merle have created several proverbial phrases in the French language, such as—C'est un fin merle, applied to a clever and unscrupulous man; un beau merle, a specious false pretender. The French call the hen-blackbird a merlette. The word merle was good English in the days of Chaucer, and considerably later.

Where the sweet merle and warbling mavis be.—DRAYTON.

Merry Scotland. The epithet "merry" was applied to England as well as to Scotland, and was a common mode of address to a company or multitude of soldiers, hunters, or boon companions.

Old King Cole was a merry old soul,
And a merry old soul was he,
And he called for his pipe, and he called for his bowl,
And he called for his fiddlers three.

Of all the girls in merry Scotland,
There's none to compare to Marjorie.
—Old King Cole.

Few words have puzzled philologists more completely than mirth and merry. Johnson suggested no etymology; Skinner derived merry from the German mehren, to magnify; and Junius from the Greek μυρίημι, to anoint, because the Greeks anointed themselves with oil when they made merry in their public games! The word has no root in any of the Teutonic languages, German, Dutch, Flemish, Danish, or Swedish; and cannot be traced to either French, Latin, Italian, or Spanish. The Gaelic yields mir, sport; mirceach, festive, sportive; near, cheerful, joyous. It thus appears on the evidence of etymology that the pleasant epithet for these islands was given by the Celtic inhabitants, and not by the Saxon and other Teutonic invaders, though it was afterwards adopted by them.

Messan, or messin, a cur, a lap-dog, a pet dog.

But tho' he was o' high degree,
The sient o' pride, nae pride had he,
But wad hae spent an hour caressin'
E'en wi' a tinker gipsy's messan.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

The glossaries to Burns, judging from the context, and the gipsy, imagine messin to mean a mongrel, a dog of mixed breeds. Jamieson says it is a small dog, a country cur, so called from Messina, in Sicily, whence this species was brought; or from the French maison, a house, because such dogs were kept in the house! The word, however, is the Gaelic measan, a pet dog, a lap-dog; from meas, fancy, kindness, regard.

We hounds slew the hare, quoth the blind measan.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Mess John, the old epithet in Scottish ballad poetry for a priest, derived from the celebration of the mass, so that Mess John signified in irreverent phrase, John, who celebrated the mass. The English has the kindred phrase, Jack Priest.

The auld folk soon gied their consent,
Syn'e for Mess John they quickly sent,
Wha ty'd them to their heart's content,
And now she's Lady Gowrie.

—The Lass o' Gowrie.

Midden or midden hole, the dung-hill or dungpit, a receptacle for the refuse, filth, and manure of a farm, situated in the centre of the farmyard, an arrangement not yet wholly superseded:—

Ye glowered at the moon, and fell in the midden.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The tither's something dour o' treadin',
But better stuff ne'er claw'd a midden.

—BURNS: Elegy on the Year 1788.

The word is still used in the Northern counties of England, and was derived by Ray from mud. The true derivation is from the Gaelic meadhon, the centre, the middle, or midst.

Therein lay three and thirty sows,
Trundlin' in a midden
Of draff.

—Pebbles to the Play.

Mim, meek, modest, prudish, prim, reticent, affected and shy of speech; applied only to young women, or contemptuously to effeminate young men. This word is usually derived from the English mum, which means silent or speechless. The Scottish mim means mealy mouthed, only speaking when spoken to, over-discreet in conversation, assertion, or reply:—

See! up he's got the Word o' God,
And meek and mim he's view'd it.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Maidens should be mim till they're married.—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Some mim-mou'd pouter'd priestie,
Fu' lifted up wi' Hebrew lore,
And hands upon his breastie.

—BURNS: To Willie Chalmers.

Mim, as distinguished from mum, is an evident rendering of the Gaelic min, soft, delicate, smooth, mild, meek; min bheùlach is from min and beul, a mouth, the same as the Scottish mim-mouthed, used by Burns; min-bhriathar, a soft word or expression, from min and briathar, a word. Mim is provincial and colloquial in England.

First go the ladies, mim, mim, mim,
Next come the gentlemen, prim, prim,
prim;

Then comes the country clown,
Gallop a-trot, trot, trot.

—Nursery Rhymes of England.

Minikin, very small, applied in derision to a little affected person of either sex; derived possibly from the Gaelic min, small; or from the Flemish mannikin, a little man.

Minnie, a term of endearment for a mother.

My daddie looks glum, and my minnie looks sour,

They flyte me wi' Jamie because he is poor.—Logic o' Buchan.

From the Flemish min, love, and the Gaelic min, sweet, soft, pleasant, kind, musical; also little, used as a term of endearment.

Mint, to attempt, to try, to essay, to aim at. The resemblance in the idea of the Scottish mint, to attest, to try, to essay, and the Mint, where the precious metals are essayed, or tried as to their purity before they are coined into money, is curious, especially when it is remembered that the Mint was formerly and is still sometimes called the Assay Office. The English word Mint, for the Assay Office, is usually traced to the German münze, the Dutch munte, the Latin moneta, money. The etymology of the Scottish mint, to essay, or try, is unknown; though it is possibly to be found in the Allemanische or German patois meinta, to intend, to mean to do a thing.

Mintin's nae makin'.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

A man may mint and no' hit the mark.
—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Mird, to ogle, to leer, to make amorous signs and advances to a woman.

Donald was smerkit wi' mirds and mockery.—JAMES HOGG: Donald MacGillivray.

Mird wi' your makes (equals).—JAMIESON.

Mirk, dark. Of uncertain etymology, but probably derivable from the Gaelic murcach, sad, sorrowful, gloomy.

A man's mind is a mirk mirror.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Oh mirk! mirk! is the midnight hour,
And loud the tempest's roar.

—BURNS: Lord Gregory.

'Twixt the gloaming and the mirk,
When the kye come hame.

—JAMES HOGG.

Mirkilins, the gloaming, inclining to be mirk or dark.

Mischant, a worthless person; from the French mechant, wicked.

Mischanter, a euphonistic name for the devil, synonymous with the English "old mischief," sometimes applied to the same personage. It is probable that mischanter, as applied to the devil, means the mischief-maker, or doer of mischief or wickedness.

Mishanter, misfortune, which is not of the same etymology as mischanter, is probably a corrupt abbreviation of misadventure.

Gin Rab Roy hae heard o' this lady's mishanter, he wadna be lang o' clearin' the house—Lord Lovat an' a', and letting her gang hame.—MACLEAY'S Memoirs of the Clan MacGregor.

Misleard, unmannerly, rude, mischievous, ill-conditioned.

Lord Lovat's sae misleard a chap that gin he ken't we were kind to her, he wad mak' whangs o' our hides to mend his Highland brogues wi'.—MACLEAY'S Memoirs of the Clan MacGregor.

Missie, a fondling term for a very young girl. The English word miss, of which, at first sight, missie would seem to be an affectionate diminutive, is of very uncertain derivation. It is commonly supposed to be the first syllable of mistress, the French maitresse (the feminine of maitre). Miss and Missie are peculiar to Scotch and English, and are unknown in any of the Teutonic and Romance languages. The Teutonic languages use the word jungfrau, and fräulein; the French use demoiselle, or mademoiselle; the Italians signorina; and the Spanish senorita. Perhaps the graceful miss and missie in Scotch and English are from the Gaelic maise, beauty, grace, comeliness, or maiseach, pretty, beautiful, elegant. These are more appropriate as the designation of a young unmarried lady than mistress would be, implying, as that word does, a sense of command and mastery.

Mister, want, need, great poverty ; misterful, necessitous.

Unken'd and misterful in the deserts of Libye.

—GAWIN DOUGLAS : Translation of the Æneid.

Misterfu' folk should nae be mensfu'.
(Needy people should not be too particular).—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The original phrase of misterfu' beggars, or needy beggars, was afterwards corrupted into masterful beggars, i.e., arrogant or sturdy beggars, as they are called in an edict of James VI., "the whole class of maisterfull and ydill beggaris, sornaris (sorners), fulis (fools), and bardis (wandering minstrels or ballad-singers)." It is difficult to account for mister and misterful, unless they be derived from the Scottish Gaelic miide, the Irish Gaelic miste, the comparative of ole, bad or evil. Mistear and mistire signify a sly, cunning, and mean person, as well as a needy beggar. The corruption to masterful in the sense of arrogant is easily accounted for.

Mool, to have carnal intercourse ; sometimes corrupted into mow or mowe.

An' there'll be Alaster Sibbie
That in wi' black Bessie did mool,
Wi' snivellin' Lillie an' Tibbie
The lass that sits aft on the stool.
(the cutty stool, q. v.)

—The Blythesome Bridal.

Jamieson's Dictionary contains neither mool nor mowe, in the sense in which they are used in the too libidinous vernacular ; but has mool, to crumble, and mowe or mow, dust or mould.

Moolins, refuse, grains of corn, husks, or chaff ; sometimes crumbs of bread ; from the Gaelic muilleán, a husk or particle of chaff or grain ; the waste of the meal at the miller's.

The pawky wee sparrow will peck aff your floor,
The bauld little Robin hops in at your door ;
But the heaven-soaring lark 'mang the cauld drift will dee,
Afore he'll come cowerin' your moolins to pree.

—JAMES BALLANTINE : Winter Promptings.

Mools, from mould—earth, the grave.

And Jeanie died. She had not lain i' the mools
Three days ere Donald laid aside his tools,
And closed his forge, and took his passage home.

But long ere forty days had run their round,
Donald was back upon Canadian ground—
Donald the tender heart, the rough, the brave,
With earth and gowans for his true love's grave.—All the Year Round.

Moop and mell, to feed together ; mell, to associate with ; from the French meler, to mingle. Halliwell's Archaic Dictionary contains mouch—said to be a Lincolnshire word, signifying to eat greedily.

The auld West Bow sae steep and crookit,
Where bawbee pies wee callants moopit.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

But aye keep mind to moop and mell
Wi' sheep o' credit like thysel.

—BURNS; Poor Mailie.

Guid ale hauds me bare and busy,
Gars me moop wi' the servant hizzie;
Stand i' the stool when I hae done;
Guid ale keeps my heart abune.

—BURNS; Good Ale Comes.

Moop does not mean to keep company with (mell does, meddle with, have to do with), moop really means to eat, or rather to nibble, and, if I mistake not, is an old English word,—the present form of the word is mump.—R. DRENNAN.

Morn. The Scotch make a distinction between the morn, which means to-morrow, and morn (without the article), which means morning—thus, "the morn's morn" is to-morrow morning.

Mother-naked, stark-naked, utterly naked; as naked as the new-born babe at the moment of birth. This word, though a compound of two English ones, has never been admitted into modern English dictionaries, and does not even appear in Nares, Halliwell, or Wright. If it were ever English, there remain no traces of it either in literature or in the common speech of the people. It is still current in the Scottish vernacular, and in poetical composition.

They'll shape me in your arms, Janet,
A dove, but and a swan,
At last they'll shape me in your arms
A mother-naked man.
Cast your green mantle over me,
I'll be myself again.

—Ballad of the Young Tamlane.

Readers of the "Arabian Nights' Entertainments" will remember the counterpart of the story of Young Tamlane, in that marvellous compilation of Eastern romance.

Mouter, fee paid to the miller for grinding corn; old English, multure; French, moudre, to grind.

It's good to be merry and wise,
Said the miller when he montered twice.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The quaker's wife sat down to bake
Wi' a' her bairns about her,
Ilk ane gat a quarter cake
And the miller gat his mouter.

—CHAMBERS'S Old Song.

Mowes, jesting, mockery, grimaces; to make mowes, to make faces.

Affront your friend in mowes and tine him in earnest.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

It has been supposed that mowes, which in this sense is only used in the plural, is derived from mou', a Scottish abbreviation of mouth. It would seem so at first blush; but as the French have "faire la moue," "grimace faite par mecontentement, en allongeant les levres," and as moue in that language does not signify a mouth, it is probable that the source of mowes is to be sought in the French and not in the Teutonic. Possibly both the Scottish more and the French moue have a common origin in the Celtic and Gaelic muig, a discontented look, an ill-natured frown. In English slang, mug signifies the face; and "ugly mug" is a common expression for an ugly face.

Muckle, mickle, meikle, great, large, big; muckle-mou'd, big-mouthed, wide-mouthed, clamorous, vociferous; Muckle-mou'd Meg, a name given to a cannon of large calibre. This word is akin to the English much, the Spanish mucho, the Greek mega and megala, and the Latin magnus—all implying the sense of greatness. The Gaelic has meud, [in which the final d is often pronounced ch], bulk, great size; and meudaich, to magnify.

Every little helps to mak a muckle.
—Scots Proverb.

Far hae I travelled,
And muckle hae I seen,
But buttons upon blankets
Saw I never nane.

—Our Gudeman cam' Hame at E'en.

Mull, a snuff or tobacco-box, as used in the Highlands. The Lowland Scotch sometimes call a snuff-box "a sneeshin mill," mill being a corruption of mull; from the Gaelic mala, a bag, the French malle, a trunk or box.

The luntin' pipe and sneeshin mill
Are handed round wi' right guidwill.
—Burns: The Two Dogs.

Jamieson says, with a non-comprehension of the origin of the word mill and its connection with mull, that the snuff-box was formerly used in the country as a mill for grinding the dried tobacco leaves! If so, the box must have contained some machinery for the purpose. But neither Jamieson, nor anybody else, ever saw a contrivance of that kind in a snuff-box.

Murgullie, to spoil, to mangle, to lacerate, to deform. Sometimes written margulye.

He wadna murgullie the howlet on the moudiewort either.—MACLEAY'S Memoirs of the Clan MacGregor.

Muslin-kail, an epithet applied by Burns to a purely vegetable soup, without animal ingredients of any kind, and compounded of barley, greens, onions, &c.

I'll sit down o'er my scanty meal,
Be 't water-brose or muslin-kail,
Wi' cheerfu' face,
As lang's the Muses dinna fail
To say the grace.
—Epistle to James Smith.

It has been supposed that the word muslin was applied to it on account of its thinness. The French call it soupe maigre; but as muslin was only introduced to Europe from Mosul in India in 1670, and vegetable broth was known for countless ages before that time in every part of the world, it is possible that muslin is an erroneous phonetic rendering of meslin, or mashlum. Both meslin and mashlum appear in Jamieson, who translates the former as "mixed corn," and the latter as "a mixture of edibles," but gives no etymology for either. Mess is a word that, with slight variations, appears in almost every language of Europe, and which, in its English form, is derived by nearly all philologists from mensa, a table. But that this is an error will appear on a little examination, for mess originally signified, in nearly every instance in which it was used, a dish of vegetables. The old translation of the Bible speaks of a mess of pottage, a purely vegetable compound. Milton speaks of Herbs and other country messes,

Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses.

The Dutch and Flemish moes signifies a dish of herbs, or herbs reduced to what the French call a purée; the Americans call oatmeal porridge, or any compound of mashed grain, a mush. The Gaelic meas signifies fruit or vegetables, and this, combined with the word lan, full, is doubtless the true root of meslin or maslum, rendered muslin by Burns's printers. It may be observed that mask, to render into a pulp or purée, is exclusively used for vegetables, as mashed potatoes, mashed turnips, &c., and that hash or mince is the word employed by cooks for the reduction of beef, mutton, and other flesh of animals into smaller portions or particles. Muslin-kail seems to be peculiar to Burns.

Mutch, a woman's cap or bonnet; from the Flemish muts, the German mützen, which have the same meaning.

Their toys and mutches were sae clean,
They glancit in our ladies' e'en.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

A' dressed out in aprons clean,
Add braw white Sunday mutches.

—SIR ALEXANDER BOSWELL: *Jenny
Dang the Weaver*.

Mutchkin, a pint; from the Flemish mudde, a hectolitre, a large quart; or muid, a quart. An English traveller, who prided himself on his knowledge of the Scotch language, called at an inn in Glasgow for a mutchkin of whisky, under the idea that mutchkin signified a gill, or a small glass. "Mutchkin!" inquired the waiter, "and a' to yoursel'?" "Yes, a mutchkin!" said the Englishman. "I trow ye'll be gey an' fou," said the waiter, "an' yedrinkit." "Never you mind," said the Englishman, "bring it." And it was brought. Great thereanent was the Englishman's surprise. He drank no more than a gill of it; but he added meanwhile a new Scottish word to his vocabulary.

N

Nae-thing. The English language, or at least the rhymers who write English, have lost many rhymes by not being able to make nothing do duty for nothing; whence they might have claimed it as a rhyme for slow-thing, low-thing, and many others too obvious to be specified. The Scottish language, in preserving nae-thing, has emphasised the etymology of the word. It is impossible to find a rhyme for the English nothing, but for the Scottish nae-thing Burns has found that there are many; among others, ae-thing, claithing, graithing, gaything, plaything, &c.

Napery, table-linen; from the French nappe, a tablecloth, or the English napkin, a little cloth.

I thought a beetle or bittle had been the thing that the women have when they are washing towels and napery—things for dadding them with.—DEAN RAMSAY: The Diamond Beetle Case.

Nappy. This word was used by a few English writers in the eighteenth century, but was never so common in England as it was in Scotland. It always signified strong drink, particularly ale or beer, and not wine or spirits.

Two bottles of as nappy liquor
As ever reamed in horn or bicker.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Care, mad to see a man sae happy,
E'en drowned himsel' among the nappy.

BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

With nappy beer, I to the barn repaired.
—GAY'S Fables.

The word is rendered in French by "capiteux, qui monte à la tete"—that is to say, heady. It seems derivable from the English slang nob, the head, as in the pugilistic phrase, "One for his nob," "One (blow) for his head;" whence also the familiar nopper, the head. The original word was the German knob, a round lump, or ball, in allusion to the shape; whence knobby, rounded or lumpy. Nappie, in the sense of strong drink that mounts to the head, becomes, by extension of meaning, strong and vigorous; "a nappie callant" is a strong, vigorous youth, with a good head on his shoulders.

Nappy.—Bailey's definition of this word in his English Dictionary is "Nappy-ale, such as will cause persons to take or knap pleasant and strong ale."—R. DRENNAN.

Neb, the nose. Flemish sneb (with the elision of the s), the nose, the beak; a point, as the neb or nib of a pen.

She holds up the neb to him,
And arms her with the boldness of a wife.

—SHAKESPEARE: Winter's Tale.

Turn your neb northwards, and settle for awhile at St. Andrews.

—SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel.

Neep, a turnip; from the French navet.

A late Lord Justice-Clerk of the Court of Session, who was fond of sport, was shooting pheasants in a field of turnips, when the farmer, whose consent had not been asked, and who looked upon the sportsman as an illegal trespasser, rushed out of his house in a towering passion, and called out in a loud voice, "Come oot o' that you, sir! come oot o' that immediately." The Lord Justice-Clerk, unaccustomed to this style of address, confronted the angry man, and asked him if he knew to whom he was speaking? "I dinna ken, and I dinna care; ye'se come oot o' that, or I'll mak it the waur for ye." "I'm the Lord Justice-Clerk," said the legal dignitary, thinking to overawe the irate agriculturist. "I dinna care whose clerk ye are, but ye'se come oot o' my neeps." How the altercation ended is not on record, though it is believed that his lordship left the field quietly, after enlightening the farmer as to his high status and position, and cooling his wrath by submission to an authority not to be successfully contested, without greater trouble than the contest was worth.—Scottish Wit and Humour.

Neuk, a corner; English a nook, a small corner. Both words are derived from the Gaelic uig, a corner, which, with the indefinite article an before it, was corrupted from an ook, or an uig, into a neuk, or a nook. The Flemish uig and hoek, and the German eck, a corner, are traceable to the same Celtic root.

The deil sits girnin' in the neuk,
Rivin' sticks to roast the Deuk.
—Jacobite Ballad on the Victory of the Duke of Cumberland at Culloden.

Nevermas, the time that never comes. This word, equivalent to the "Greek kalends," is formed after the model of Martinmas, Michaelmas, and Christmas. It does not occur in Jamieson. It is found in Armstrong's Gaelic Dictionary as the translation of Là buain na lin, the "day of the cutting of the flax," which has in the Highlands the meaning of "never," or "at no time," or "at a very uncertain time."

Nicher, to neigh, to snort; French, nennir, sometimes written hennir; Flemish, nenniker, or niniker.

Little may an auld nag do that maunna nicher.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scotts Proverbs.

Nick, Auld Nick, Nickie-Ben.

All these names are used in Scotland to signify the devil; the third is peculiar to Scotland, and finds no place in English parlance.

But fare-you-weel, auld Nickie-Ben!
Oh, wad ye tak a thought an' men',
Ye aiblins might, I dinna ken,
Still hae a stake!

I'm wae to think upon yon den,
Even for your sake!

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Why Nick came to signify Satan in the British Isles has never been satisfactorily explained. Butler in Hudibras supposes that he was so called after Nicholas Macchiavelli.

Nick Macchiavel had no such trick,
Though he gave name to our Old Nick.

But the name was in use many ages before Macchiavelli was born; and the passage must, therefore, be considered as a joke, rather than as a philological assertion. It is remarkable, too, that Nick and Old Nick, whatever be the derivation, is a phrase unknown to any nation of Europe except our own. The derivation from Nicholas is clearly untenable; that from Nikker, a water-sprite or goblin, in the Scandinavian mythology, is equally so; for the Old Nick of British superstition is reputed to have more to do with fire than water, and has no attributes in common with Satan, the prince of the powers of evil. To derive the word from niger, or nigger, black, because the devil is reputed to be black, is but perverted ingenuity. All the epithets showered upon the devil by Burns,

Oh thou, whatever title suit thee,
Auld Satan, Hornie, Nick, or Clootie, are, with the exception of Satan, titles of irreverence, familiarity, and jocosity; Hornie, from the horns he is supposed to wear on his forehead, and Clootie, from his cloven hoofs, like those of a goat. It is probable that Nick and Old Nick are words of a similarly derisive character, and that nick, which appears in the glossaries to Allan Ramsay and to Burns, as cheat or to cheat, is the true origin, and that Old Nick simply signifies the Old Cheat. It may be mentioned, in connection with the idea of cheat or nick, that old gentleman is a name often given to Satan by people who object to the word devil, and that the same name is descriptive, according to the Slang Dictionary, of a card almost imperceptibly longer than the other cards of the pack, used by card-sharpers for the purpose of cheating. To be out on the nick is, on the same authority, to be out thieving. The etymology of nick in this sense is doubtful. Dr. Adolphus Wagner, the learned editor of the German edition of Burns, derives it from the Greek Νεκω, and translates it "to bite or to cheat." In Wright's Dictionary of Obsolete and Provincial English, nick is "to deceive, to cheat, to deny; also, to win at dice unfairly."

Nidder, Nither, to lower, to depress; niddered, pinched with cold or hunger, with the vital energies depressed; also, stunted or lowered in growth. From the German nieder, low, or down; the Flemish neder, English nether, as in the Biblical phrase, "the upper and the nether millstone." Netherlands, the low countries; the French Pays Bas.

Nithered by the norlan' breeze,
The sweet wee flower aft dwines and dees.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Nieve, the fist, the closed hand; nevel, to strike with the fist, a blow with the fist. From the Teutonic knuffen, to beat with the fist, to cuff, to fisticuff.

Though here they scrape, and squeeze,
and growl,
Their worthless nieve-fu' o' a soul
May in some future carcass howl
The forest's fright.

—BURNS: Epistle to John Lapraik.

Sir Alexander Ramsay of Fasque, showing a fine stot to a butcher, said, "I was offered twenty guineas for that beast." "Indeed, Fasque!" said the butcher, "ye should hae steekit your nieve upon that."

—DEAN RAMSAY.

They partit manly with a nevel;
God wat gif hair was ruggit
Betwixt thame.

—CHRIST'S KIRK ON THE GREEN.

He hasna as muckle sense as a cow could had in her nieve.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Mark the rustic, haggis-fed,
The trembling earth resounds his tread,
Clap in his wale nieve a blade,
He'll mak' it whistle;
And legs and arms and heads will sned
Like taps o' thrissle.

—BURNS: To a Haggis.

Niffer, to barter, to exchange.
Probably, according to Jamieson, from nieve, the fist or closed hand—to exchange an article that is in one hand for that which is in the other. This etymology is doubtful, although no better one has been suggested.

Ye'll no be niffered but for a waur, and that's no possible.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Ye see your state wi' theirs compared,
And shudder at the niffer;
But, cast a moment's fair regard,
What maks the mighty differ?

—BURNS: To the Unco Guid.

Nippit, miserly, mean, parsimonious, near; from nip, to pinch. The English pinch is often applied in the same sense.

Noo or the noo, at the present time, now.

On one occasion a neighbour waited on a small laird in Lanarkshire, named Hamilton, and requested his signature to an accommodation bill for twenty pounds at three months' date, which led to the following characteristic colloquy:—

"Na! na!" said the laird, "I canna do that."

"What for no, laird? Ye hae done the same thing for others."

"Aye, aye, Tammas! but there's wheels within wheels that ye ken naething about. I canna do't."

"It's a sma' thing to refuse me, laird."

"Weel, ye see, Tammas, if I was to pit my name till't, ye wad get the siller frae the bank, and when the time cam round, ye wadna be ready, an' I wad hae to pay't. An' then me an' you wad quarrel. So we may just as weel quarrel the noo, an' I'll keep the siller in my pouch."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Nowte, horned cattle; corrupted in English into neat.

Mischief begins wi' needles and prins,
And ends wi' horned nowte.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Or by Madrid he takes the route,
To thrum guitars and fecht wi' nowte.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Lord Seafield, who was accused by his brother of accepting a bribe to vote for the union betwixt England and Scotland, endeavoured to retort upon him by calling him a cattle-dealer. "Ay, weel," replied his brother, "better sell nowte than nations."

Noyt, noit, or nowt, to injure, to hurt, to beat, to strike; from the French nuire, to injure.

The miller was of manly mak,
To meet him was na mowis,

They durst not ten come him to tak,
 Sae noytit he their powis.
 —Christ's Kirk on the Green.

Nugget, a word scarcely known to the English until the discovery of gold in California and Australia, when it was introduced by the miners to signify a large piece of the metal as distinguished from grains of gold dust. Many attempts have been made to trace its etymology, only one of which has found a qualified acceptance—that which affirms it to be a corruption of ingot. This is plausible, but not entirely satisfactory. In some parts of Scotland, the word for a luncheon, or a hasty repast taken at noon, is noggit—sometimes written knockit—which means a piece. In other parts of Scotland the word used is piece, as, "Gie the bairn its piece," and the word lunch itself, from the Gaelic lonach, hungry, signifies the piece which is cut off a loaf or a cheese to satisfy the appetite during the interval that elapses before the regular meal.

When hungry thou stoodest, staring like an oaf,
 I sliced the luncheon from the barley loaf.
 —GAY.

All these examples tend to show that nugget simply means a lump or piece. In Kent, according to Wright's Archaic Dictionary, a lump of food is called a nuncheon.

Nyse, to beat, to pommel, a word in use among the boys of the High School of Edinburgh; from the Gaelic naitheas (t silent), a mischief. "I'll nyse you," "I'll do you a mischief."

O

Ock, a diminutive particle appended to Scottish words, and implying littleness combined with the idea of tenderness and affection, as in lass, lassock, wife, wifock. This termination is sometimes combined with ie, thus making a double diminutive, as lassockie, often spelled lassiekie, and wifockie, wifiekie. Ock is probably derived from the Gaelic og, young.

Olyte, diligent, industrious, active. According to Mr. Halliwell, this word appears in the Harleian MS., and is still used in some parts of England. Jamieson spells it olight and olite, and derives it from the Swedish offlact, "too light, fleet," but no such word is to be found in the Swedish dictionaries, nor in those of the other Teutonic languages. Possibly the true origin of the word is the Gaelic oil, to rear, educate, instruct, and oilte, instructed, oilean, instruction, good-breeding; whence an olyte mother, in the proverb quoted below, may signify a woman instructed in the due performance of all her household duties, and performing them so zealously as to leave nothing for her daughter to do. Oileanta, more commonly written ealanta, signifies quick, nimble, active.

An elyte mother makes a sweer daughter.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Oo aye ! An emphatic assertion of assent. The French oui.

Orra, all sorts of odds and ends, occasional.

Where Donald Caird fand orra things.
—SCOTT.

She's a weel-educate woman, and if she win to her English as I hae heard her do at orra times, she may come to fickle us a'.

—SCOTT: The Antiquary.

Orra,—now and then, unusual, not frequently met with, almost always associated with time.—R. DRENNAN.

Orra man. A man employed to do odd jobs on a farm, that are not in the regular routine of the work of the other farm servants.

Oughtlins, pertaining to duty, or to that which ought to be done; a word composed of ought, a debt owing to duty, honour and propriety, and lins (see AIRLINS, WESTLINS, &c.), inclining towards.

If that daft buckie, Geordie Wales,
Was grown oughtlins douser.
—BURNS: On Receiving a Newspaper.

Oorie or oorie, cold, shivering. This word, peculiar to Scotland, is derived from the Gaelic fuar, cold, which, with the aspirate, becomes fhuar, and is pronounced uar.

I thought me on the ourie cattle.
—BURNS: A Winter Night.

The English hoar-frost, and the hoary (white, snowy) hair of old age, are traceable to the same etymological root. Jamieson, however, derives oorie from the Icelandic ur, rain, and the Swedish ur, stormy weather, though the origin of both is to be found in the Gaelic uaire, bad weather or storm.

Outthrough, entirely or completely through.

They dived in through the one burn bank,
Sae did they outthrough the other.

* —BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

Out-cast, a quarrel, to "cast-out," to quarrel.

O dool to tell,
They've had a bitter black cast-out
Atween themsel.
—BURNS: The Two Herds.

I didna ken they had casten-out.
—DEAN RAMSAY.

Outlers, cattle left out at night in the fields, for want of byres or folds to shelter them.

Among the brackens on the brae,
Between her an' the moon,
The Deil or else an outler quey
Gat up and gae a croon.
Poor Lizzie's heart maist lap the hool—
Near lav'rock height she jumpit,
But miss'd a foot, and in the pool
Out owre the lugs she plumpit.
—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Outside of the Loof, the back of the hand. "The outside of my loof to ye," is a phrase that signifies a wish on the part of the person who uses it to reject the friendship or drop the acquaintance of the person to whom it is addressed.

"If ye'll no join the Free Kirk," said a wealthy widow to her cousin, to whom she had often conveyed the hint that he might expect a handsome legacy at her death (a hint that never ripened into a fact), "ye'll hae the outside o' my loof, and never see the inside o't again."—C. M.

Outspeckle, a laughing-stock; and kenspeckle, to be easily recognised by some outer mark of singularity. These words have a common origin, and are derived either from speck, or speckle, a small mark or spot; or from spectacle, corrupted into speckle; but most probably from the former.

"Wha drives thir kye," gan Willie to say,
"To mak' an outspeckle o' me!"
—Border Ballads: Jamie Telfer.

Outwittens, unknowingly, without the knowledge of.

Outwittens of my daddie (i.e., my father not knowing it).—JAMIESON.

Overlay or owerlay, the burden or chorus of a song; the refrain.

And aye the owerlay o' his sang
Was, wae's me for Prince Charlie.
—Jacobite Ballad.

The French refrain, recently adopted into English, is of Gaelic origin, from ramh or raf, an oar, and rann, a song; a sea song or boat-song, formerly chanted to the motion of the oars by Celtic boatmen in Brittany and the Scottish Highlands.

Ower Bogie, a proverbial phrase used in regard to a marriage which has been celebrated by a magistrate, and not by a clergyman. Synonymous in Aberdeenshire with the English Gretna Green marriages, performed under similar conditions. The origin is unknown, though it is supposed that some accommodating magistrate, at some time or other, resided on the opposite side of the river Bogie from that of the town or village inhabited by the lovers who desired to be joined in the bonds of matrimony without subjecting themselves to the sometimes inconvenient interrogations of the kirk. Jamieson erroneously quotes the phrase as owre boggie.

I will awa wi' my love,
I will awa' wi' her,
Though a' my kin' had sorrow and said,
I'll ower Bogie wi' her.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: Tea Table Miscellany.

Owergang, to surpass, to exceed.

You're straight and tall and handsome withal,
But your pride owergangs your wit.
—Ballad of Proud Lady Margaret.

Ower-word, a chorus or burden. A phrase often repeated in a song, the French bourdon, the English burthen of a song.

And aye the over-word of his song
Was, wae's me for Prince Charlie.
—GLEN: A Jacobite Song.

The starling flew to the window stane,
It whistled and it sang,
And aye the over-word o' the tune
Was "Johnnie tarries lang."
—Johnnie of Breadislee.

Oxter, the armpit and the space between the shoulder and the bosom; sometimes it is used incorrectly for the lap; and to embrace, to encircle with the arms in fondness. From the Gaelic uchd, the breast or bosom; whence also the Latin uxor, a wife, i.e., the wife of one's bosom; and uxorious, fondly attached to a wife; uchd mhac, an adopted son, the son of one's bosom. Jamieson derives oxter from the Teutonic oxtel, but no such word is to be found in the German language. The Flemish and Dutch have oksel, a gusset, which Johnson defines as "an angular piece of cloth, inserted in a garment, particularly at the upper end of the sleeve of a shirt, or as a part of the neck." This word has a clear but remote connection with the Gaelic uchd,

He did like ony mavis sing,
And as I in his oxter sat
He ca'd me aye his bosome thing.
—ALLAN RAMSAY: Tea Table Miscellany.

Here the phrase "sitting in his oxter" is equivalent to sitting folded in his arms, or clasped to his bosom.

P

Pack, familiar, intimate, closely allied.

Nae doubt but they were fain o' ither,
And unco pack and thick thegither,
Wi' social nose whiles snuff'd and howkit.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Pack is not only used as an adjective, but is common as a noun in colloquial English, as in the phrase, a pack of rascals, and a pack of thieves. In this sense it is derivable from the Gaelic pac or pacca, a troop, a mob.

Pad, to travel, to ride. Often in Scotland when a lady is seen on horseback in the rural districts, the children of the villages follow her, crying out, "Lady pad! lady pad!" Jamieson says that on pad is to travel on foot, that pad, the hoof, is a cant phrase, signifying to walk, and that the ground is padding when it has been hardened by frequent passing and repassing. He derives the word from the Latin pes, pedis, the foot. It seems, however, to be more immediately derived from path; pad, to go on the path, whether on foot or on horseback; from the German pfad, the Flemish pad, and voet-pad, the foot-path. The English dictionaries erroneously explain pad in the word foot-pad, a highway thief. But pad by itself is never used in the sense of steal. Grose's Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue has pad-borrowers, horse-stealers, as if pad signified a horse. The phrase really means path-borrowers, i.e., borrowers on the path or journey.

Padda, Paddock, a frog or toad; paddock stool, a toad-stool, a wild fungus or mushroom. Flemish pad and padde, a frog.

Says the mother, "What noise is that at the door, daughter?" "Hoot," says the lassie, "it's naething but a filthy padde." "Open the door," says the mother, "to the puir padde." Sae the lassie opened the door, and the padde cam loup, loup, loupin' in, and sat down by the ingle side. —Scottish Songs collected by ROBERT CHAMBERS, 1829.

Gowks and fools,
Frae colleges and boarding schools,
May sprout like summer paddock-stools,
In glen or shaw.

—BURNS: Verses written at Selkirk.

Old Lady Perth, offended with a French gentleman for some disparaging remark which he had made on Scottish cookery, answered him curtly, "Weel! weel! some folk like parrich, and some like paddocks." —DEAN RAMSAY.

Paidle. This eminently Scottish word has no synonym in the English language, nor in any country where everybody, even the poorest, wears shoes or boots, and where, to go barefooted, would imply the lowest social degradation. But in Scotland, a land of streams, rivulets, and burns, that wimple down the hills and cross the paths and roads, to go barefooted is a pleasure and luxury, and a convenience, especially to the children of both sexes, and even to young men and women verging upon manhood and womanhood. An Englishman may paddle his boat and his canoe, but a Scotsman paidles in the mountain stream. How the young children of England love to paidle, may occasionally be seen at the sea-side resorts of the southern counties in the summer season, but the Scottish child in the rural districts paidles all the year, and needs no holiday for the purpose.

We twa hae paidled in the burn,
Frae morning sun till dine,
But seas between us braid hae roared,
Sin' the days of auld lang syne.

—BURNS.

The remembrance of paidlin' when stirred by the singing of this immortal song by Scotsmen in America, in India, in Africa, or at the Antipodes, melts every Scottish heart to tenderness, or inspires it to patriotism, as every Scotsman, who has travelled much, very surely knows.

Paik, a beating, to beat, to thrash, to fight, to drub, to strike. Jamieson derives this word from the German pauken, to beat; but there is no such word in that language. Pauke in German, pauk in Flemish, signifies a kettle-drum; and pauken, to beat the kettle-drum, but not to beat in any other sense. The word is probably from the Gaelic paigh, to pay; and also, by an extension of meaning, to pay one's deserts by a beating, as in the proverb in Allan Ramsay—"He's sairest dung that is paid with his own wand," i.e., he is sorest hit who is beaten with his own cudgel.

Paikie, a trull, a prostitute, a filie de joie, a euphemism from the Gaelic peacadh (peaca), a sinner. Paik, a sin; the French pecher; and the Italian peccare.

In adulterie he was ta'en—
Made to be punisht for his paik.

—JAMIESON.

Pang, to fill full, to cram; pang-fu, as full as one can hold. Etymology unknown; but possibly related to the French panse, belly; pansu, large-bellied; English paunchy.

Leeze me on drink; it gies us mair
Than either school or college,
It kindles wit, it waukens lair,
It pangs us fu' o' knowledge.

—BURNS; The Holy Fair.

Parle, a discourse; from the French parler, to speak; the Italian parlare. The Gaelic beurla signifies language, and more particularly the English language.

A tocher's nae word in a true lover's parle,
But gie me my love, and a fig for the warl.—BURNS; Meg o' the Mill.

Parritch or porridge. A formerly favourite, if not essential, food of the Scottish people of all classes, composed of oatmeal boiled in water to a thick consistency, and seasoned with salt. This healthful food is generally taken with milk, but is equally palatable with butter, sugar, beer, or wine. It is sometimes retained in middle and upper class families; but among the very poor has unfortunately been displaced by the cheaper and less nutritious potato.

The hailsome parritch, chief o' Scotia's food.

—BURNS; Cotter's Saturday Night.

Partan, a crab, from the Gaelic; partanach, abounding in crabs; partan-handit, epithet applied to one who is hard-fisted and penurious, who grips his money like a crab grips with its claw.

An' there'll be partans and buckies,
An' singit sheeps' heads and a haggis.

—The Blithesome Bridal.

Pash, the head, the brow, the forehead. Allan Ramsay, barber and wig-maker, sang of his trade:—

I theek [thatch] the out, and line the inside,
Of mony a douce and witty pash,
And baithways gather in the cash.

A bare pash signifies a bald head, and mad-pash is equivalent to the English madcap. Latham's Todd's Johnson has pash, to push or butt like a ram or bull, with the head. Pash was current English in the time of Shakspeare, who uses it in the "Winter's Tale," in a passage which no commentator has been able to explain. Leontes, suspicious of the fidelity of his wife Hermione, asks his child Mamilius—

Art thou my calf?
To which Mamilius replies—

Yes! if you will, my Lord.

Leontes, still brooding on his imaginary wrong, rejoins moodily—

Thou wants a rough pash and the shoots that I have to be full like me.

It is amusing to note into what errors the English editors of Shakspeare have fallen, in their ignorance of this word. Nares thought that pash was something belonging to a bull—he did not know what—or a calf, and Steevens thought that it was the Spanish paz, a kiss. Mr. Howard Staunton, the editor of Shakspeare, had a glimpse of the meaning, and thought that pash meant a “tufted head.” Jamieson acknowledged the word, but attempted no etymology. Pash is clearly derivable from the Gaelic bathais (pronounced bash or pash), and signifies the forehead. The allusion of the unhappy Leontes to the shoots on his rough pash (wrinkled brow) is to the horns that vulgar phraseology places on the foreheads of deceived and betrayed husbands. Read by this gloss, the much-misunderstood passage in the “Winter’s Tale” becomes clear.

Paughty, proud, haughty, repulsive, but without having the qualities of mind or person to justify the assumption of superiority over others. Probably derived from the Flemish pochen, to vaunt, to brag, and pocher, a braggadocio, a fanfaron.

An askin', an askin', my father dear,
An askin' I beg of thee;
Ask not that paughty Scottish lord,
For him ye ne'er shall see.

—Ballad of the Gay Goss-Hawk.

Yon paughty dog
That bears the keys of Peter.

—BURNS: A Dream.

Paumie and taws. All Scottish school-boys, past and present, have painful knowledge of the meaning of these two words. Paumie is a stroke over the open hand, with a cane or the taws. The taws is a thong of leather cut into a fringe at the end, and hardened in the fire. It is, and was, the recognised mode of punishment for slight offences or breaches of discipline at school, when the master was unwilling to resort to the severer and more degrading punishment, inflicted a posteriori, after the fashion of Dr. Busby. Paumie is derived from the palm of the hand, the French peaume, and taws is the plural form of the Gaelic taod, a rope, a scourge.

Pawky, of a sly humour, wise, witty, cautious, discreet, and insinuating,—all in one. There is no synonym for this word in English. The etymology is unknown.

The pawky auld carle cam owre the lea,
Wi' mony good e'ens and good days to me.

Dear Smith, the slee'est, pawkie thief.
—BURNS: To James Smith.

Peat-Reek and Mountain Dew.

Peat-Reek is the smoke of peat when dried and burned for fuel, the flavour of which used to be highly appreciated in Scottish whiskey, when made by illicit distillers in lonely glens among the mountains, out of the usual reach of the exciseman. From the solitary places of its manufacture, whiskey received the poetic name of Mountain Dew, or the "Dew off Ben Nevis," which it still retains.

Mountain Dew, clear as a Scot's understanding,

Pure as his conscience wherever he goes,
Warm as his heart to the friends he has chosen,

Strong as his arm when he fights with his foes!

In liquor like this should old Scotland be toasted,

So fill up again, and the pledge we'll renew;

Unsullied in honour, our blessings upon her—

Scotland for ever! and old *Mountain
Dew*!—MACKAY.

Pech, to pant, to blow, for want of breath. Derived by Jamieson from the Danish pikken, to palpitate.

My Pegasus I gat astride,
And up Parnassus pechin'.

—BURNS: To Willie Chalmers.

There comes young Monks of high complexion,

Of mind devout, love and affection;
And in his court their hot flesh dart (tame),

Fule father-like with pech and pant,

They are sa humble of intercession,

Their errand all kind women grant,

Sic tidings heard I at the session.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: *The Evergreen—
Frae the Session*.

Pechan, the stomach.

Ev'n the ha' folk fill their pechan
Wi' sauce, ragouts, and such like trashtrie,
That's little short o' downright wastrie.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

This word seems to be a corruption of the Gaelic poc, a bag, a poke; and pocan, a little bag; and to be ludicrously applied to the belly or stomach. The English slang peckish, hungry, is probably derived from the same root, and not from the beak, or peck of a bird.

Pedder-coffe, a pedlar. In Allan Ramsay's "Evergreen," a poem ascribed to Sir David Lyndsay is entitled a "Description of Pedder-coffe, their having no regard to honesty in their vocation." Both pedder and coffe are of Teutonic derivation; ped, sometimes written pad, from the German pfad; Flemish pad, a path; and coffe or koffe, from kaufen, to buy; whence a pedlar signified a walking merchant who carried his wares along with him. But it should be observed with regard to the Teutonic derivation, that in the Kymric, or ancient language of Wales, more ancient than the German, padd signifies one that keeps a course. Attempts have been made to trace pedlar to ped, a local word in some parts of England for a basket: but this derivation would not account for pedder, a mounted highwayman; for foot-pad, a highway robber on foot, from the slang expression among thieves and beggars to go on the pad, i.e., on the tramp.

Jamieson derives the Scottish pedder from the barbarous low Latin pedarius, i.e., nudis ambulans pedibus. Sir David Lyndsay in his poem was exceedingly indignant, both with the Pedders and the Coffes, who seem to have been in their mode of transacting business with the country people, whom they favoured with their visits on their peregrinations through districts afar from towns, the exact counterparts of the tallymen at the present day. He recommends, in the interest of the people, that wherever the "pedder knaves appear in a burgh or town where there is a magistrate, that their lugs should be cuttit off," as a warning to all cheats and regrators. A similar outcry is sometimes raised against the "tallymen," or travelling linen-drapers and haberdashers, who tempt the wives of working men, and poor people generally, to buy their goods at high prices, and accept small weekly payments on account, until their extortionate bills are liquidated.

Peel, a border tower, a small fortress, of which few specimens are now left standing. A very interesting one, however, still remains in the town of Melrose. Possibly a corruption of bield, a shelter.

And black Joan, frae Creighton-peel,
O' gipsy kith an' kin'.

—BURNS: The Five Carlines.

An' when they came to the fair Dodhead Right hastily they clam (climbed) the peel,

They loosened the kye out, ane and a',
An' ranshacked the house right weel.

—Border Minstrelsy: Jamie Telfer.

Peep, to utter a faint cry or sound, like an infant or a young bird. Peepie-weepie, a querulous and tearful child; peep-sma', a feeble voice, a weak person who has to submit to the domination of one stronger; synonymous with the English "sing small." "He daurna play peep," he must not utter a word in defence of himself. In Dutch and Flemish, piepen signifies to cry like an infant; and piep-yong is a word for a very young or new-born child. The etymology is that of pipe, or the sound emitted by a flute or pipe, when gently blown upon.

Peesweep, a lapwing, or plover; peesweep-like, a contemptible epithet applied to a feeble, sharp-featured man or woman, with a shrill but not loud voice, like the cry of a plover.

Peerie, pearie or perie, a humming top; sometimes a peg-top; from the Gaelic beur (b pronounced as p), to hum, to buzz. Brand, in his well-known work on Popular Antiquities, quotes Jamieson as his authority. He defines it to mean a peg-top, and adds that the name was apparently derived from its close similarity to a pear, and that the Scotch originally called it a French pear or pearie, because it was first imported from France.

Peik-thank, is, according to Jamieson, an ungrateful person, one who returns little or no thanks for benefits conferred. Peik in this phrase seems to be a corruption and misspelling of the Gaelic beag (b pronounced as p), little. Jamieson derives it from the Italian poco.

The English pick-thank appears to have had a different origin and meaning, and signifies, according to the examples of its use in Nares, a sycophant, a favourite, a flatterer, who strove to pick up, acquire, or gather thanks from the great and powerful. Shakspeare has "smiling pick-thanks, and base newsmongers;" Fairfax, "a flatterer, a pick-thank, and a liar."

Possibly, however, the Scottish and English interpretations of the word may be more akin than might appear at first glance. Sycophants, flatterers, and parasites are proverbially ungrateful, unless it be, as La Rochefoucauld so wittily asserts, "for favours to come."

Pendles, ear-rings; from pendants.

She's got pendles in her lugs,
Cockle-shells wad set her better;
High-heel'd shoon and siller tags,
And a' the lads are wootin' at her.

Be a lassie e'er sae black,
Gin she ware the penny-siller,
Set her up on Tintock tap,
The wind will blaw a man till her!
—HERD'S Collection: Tibbie Fowler.

Pennarts. Jamieson says this word means "revenge," and quotes the proverbial saying, "I'se hae pennarts o' him yet;" suggesting that the derivation may be from pennynworths. It is more likely to be from the Gaelic pein, punishment; peanas, revenge; and pein-ard, high or great revenge.

Penny-fee, wages. Penny is commonly used in Scottish parlance for money generally, as in penny-siller, a great quantity of money; penny-maister, the town-treasurer; penny-wedding, a wedding at which every guest contributed towards the expense of the marriage festival; penny-friend, a friend whose only friendship is for his friend's money. The French use denier, and the Italians danari, in the same sense.

Peny is ane hardy knyght,
Peny is mekyl of myght,
Peny of wrong he maketh ryght
In every country where he go.

And I maun guide it canny, O.
—BURNS: My Nannie, O.

Pensy, proud, conceited; above one's station. Probably a corruption of pensive or thoughtful.

Helen Walker was held among her equals to be pensy, but the facts brought to prove this accusation seem only to evince a strength of character superior to those around her.—SCOTT: Heart of Midlothian.

Perlins or pearlins, fine linen ornamented with lace work or knitted work.

These pearlins she shall never wear,
Spak out the Lammikin.

—HERD'S Collection: Lammikin.

Pernickitie (sometimes written prig-nickitie), precise about trifles; finicking, over-dainty, trim, neat, nicely dressed, adorned with trifling articles of finery, or knick-knackets. Etymology doubtful.

The English are sae pernickity about what they eat, but no sae pernickity about what they drink.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Peuter or peuther, to canvass, to solicit votes, to thrust one's self forward in election times to ask for support; from the Gaelic put, to thrust, and putair, one who thrusts; and the Flemish peuteren, to poke one's fingers into other people's business,—rendered in the French and Flemish Dictionary (1868), "pousser les doigts, dans quelque chose."

He has peuthered Queensferry and Inverkeithing, and they say he will begin to peuther Stirling next week.—JAMIESON.

Philabeg or fillabeg, the kilt as worn by the Highlanders; literally a little cloth; from the Gaelic fileadh, a cloth, a woven garment, and beag, little.

Oh to see his tartan trews,
Bonnet blue, and laigh-heeled shoes,
Philabeg aboon his knee—
That's the laddie I'll gang wi'.

—GEDDES: Lewie Gordon.

I' faith, quo' John, I got sic flegs (frights)
Wi' their claymore and philabegs,
If I face them again, deil break my legs,
So I wish you a good mornin'.

—Jacobite Ballad: Hey Johnnie Cope.

They put on him a philabeg,
An' up his dowp they rammed a peg,
How he did skip, and he did roar,
The deils ne'er saw sic fun before.

They took him niest to Satan's ha',
There to lilt wi' his grandpapa;
Says Cumberland, I'll no gang ben
For fear I meet wi' Charlie's men.

—Jacobite Ballad: Bonnie Laddie Highland Laddie.

Pickle, a small quantity; from the Italian piccolo, small, akin to the Gaelic beag (or peag), little. Pickle in familiar English, as applied to a small, unruly, and troublesome boy, is of the same origin; "a wee pickle saut," a very small quantity of salt; "a pickle o' tow," a small quantity of flax or hemp for spinning into yarn. Pickle is sometimes used for pilfer, to steal small things. "To pickle in one's ain pock, or peuk," i.e., to take grain out of one's own bag, is a proverbial expression signifying to depend on one's own resources or exertions. A hen is said to "pickle up" when she searches for and feeds on grain. The word, in these senses, is not from the same source as pickle, to preserve in salt or vinegar.

She gies the herd a pickle nits
And twa red-cheekit apples.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Pig, an earthen pitcher or other vessel, a flower-pot. Piggerie, a place for the manufacture of crockery and earthenware. Pigman and pigwife, hawkers of crockery, or keepers of shops where earthenware is sold; from the Gaelic pigeadh, an earthen pot or jar; pigeon, a little pot; pigeadair, a potter or manufacturer of crockery. The English pig iron, iron in a lump, before its final manufacturing by fire into a superior quality, seems to be derived from its coarse nature, as resembling the masses of clay from which crockery and earthenware are formed by the similar agency of fire.

My Paisley piggy

Contains my drink, but then, oh,
No wines did e'er my brains engage
To tempt my mind to sin, oh.

—CHAMBERS'S Scots Songs: The Country Lass.

She that gangs to the well w' ill-will Either the pig breaks or the water will spill.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Where the pig's broken, let the shards lie.
—Idem.

An English lady, who had never before been in Scotland, arranged to spend the night at a respectable inn, in a small provincial town in the south. Desiring to make her as comfortable as possible, Grizzy, the chambermaid, on showing her to the bedroom, said—

"Would you like to hae a pig in your bed this cauld nicht, mem?"

"A what?" said the lady.

"A pig, mem; I will put a pig in your bed to keep you warm!"

"Leave the room, young woman; your mistress shall hear of your insolence."

"Nae offence, I hope, mem. It was my mistress bade me ask it, an' I'm sure she meant it oot o' kindness."

The lady was puzzled, but feeling satisfied that no insult was intended, she looked at the girl and then said pleasantly—

"Is it common in this country for ladies to have pigs in their beds?"

"Gentlemen hae them tae, mem, when the weather's cauld. I'll steek the mouth o't an' tie it up in a clout."

A right understanding was come to at last, and the lady found the pig with hot water in her bed not so disagreeable as she imagined.—DOUGLAS'S Scottish Wit and Humour.

A rich Glasgow manufacturer, an illiterate man who had risen from the ranks, having ordered a steam yacht, sent for a London artist to decorate the panels in the principal cabin. The artist asked what kind of decoration he required? The reply was, Only thing simple, just a pig w' a flower. Great was the surprise of the Glasgow body when the work was completed, to see that the decoration consisted of swine, each with a flower in its jaws, which had been painted on every panel. He made no complaint—paid the bill, and declared the effect to be satisfactory, though "it was no exactly what he had meant in ordering it."—Traits of Scottish Life.

Pike, to pick and steal; pikie, one addicted to pilfering and petty thefts.

By these pickers and stealers.

—SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet.

Pinch and drouth, hunger and thirst.

Nae mair w' pinch and drouth we'll pine

As we hae done—a dog's propine—

But quaff our draughts o' rosy wine,

Carle! an' the king come.

—Jacobite Song.

Pinkie-small, the smallest candle that is made, the weakest kind of table beer, anything small. The word is also applied to the eye when contracted.

There's a wee pinkie hole in the stocking.—JAMIESON.

Possibly this word is from the Latin punctus, a point, or from the Dutch and Flemish pink, the little finger, and pink-oogen, to look with half-closed eyes. The Kymric pin signifies a small branch or twig.

Pirrie-dog, a dog that follows at his master's heels; pirrie, to follow and fawn upon one, like a dependant, for what can be gained from or wheedled out of him. Jamieson derives this word from the Teutonic paeren, or paeren, to pair or couple; and refers to parry, an Aberdeenshire word, with a quotation, "When ane says parry, a' say parry," signifying that when anything is said by a person of consequence, it is echoed by every one else. The true origin both of pirrie and the Aberdonian parry seems to be the Gaelic peire, a polite word for the breech. A dog that follows at the heels is a euphemism for a less mentionable part of the person. Jamieson suggests that the Aberdeenshire parry is derived from the French il parait; but the Gaelic peire better suits the humour of the aphorism.

Piss-a-bed, a vulgar name for the dandelion or taraxacum—a beautiful, though despised, wild flower of the fields. The word appears to have originated in Scotland, and thence to have extended to England. It is a corruption of the Gaelic pìos, a cup, and buidhe, yellow—a yellow cup, not, however, to be confounded with buttercup, another wild flower—the companion in popular affection of the daisy.

The daisy has its poets,—all have striven
Its world-wide reputation to prolong;
But here's its yellow neighbour!—who has given
The dandelion a song?

Come, little sunflower, patient in neglect,
Will ne'er a one of them assert thy claim,

But, passing by, contemptuously connect
Thee and thy Scottish name?

—ROBERT LEIGHTON: To a Dandelion.

Several years before Robert Leighton strove to vindicate the fair fame of the dandelion, a couplet in its praise appeared in the Illustrated London News, in a poem entitled "Under the Hedge":—

Dandelions with milky ring,
Coins of the mintage of the spring.

Pit-dark, dark as in the bottom of a pit.

'Tis yet pit-dark, the yard a' black about,
And the night fowl begin again to shout.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

It is very probable that pit-dark was the original form of the English pitch-dark, as dark as pitch, i.e., as dark as tar, or coal tar. The etymology from pit, a hole, is preferable.

Pixie, a fairy. This Scottish word is used in some parts of England, particularly in the south and west. It has been supposed to be a corruption of puck, or puckie, little puck, sometimes called Robin Good-fellow. It is more probably from the Gaelic beag (peg), little, sith (shee), a fairy, anglicised into pixie, a little fairy, a fairy sprite. Puck is the name of one particular goblin and sprite in Shakspeare, and in popular tradition; but the pixies are multitudinous, and the words puck and pixie are from different sources. The English puck is the word that, in one variety or another, runs through many European languages. The Welsh or Kymric has pucca (pooça), a goblin, a sprite, the Gaelic bocan, and Lowland Scottish boyie, the Russian bug, the Dutch and Flemish spook, the German spuk, &c.

Pixie-rings are fairy-rings, supposed to be made in the grass by the footsteps, not of one puck, but of many little sprites that gamble by moonlight on the green pixie-stool, a popular name for the fungus, sometimes called toad-stool; pixie-led, bewildered and led astray by the ignis fatuus, Jack o' Lantern, or Will o' the Wisp.

Plack, an ancient Scottish coin of the value of one-twelfth of an English penny.

There's your plack an' my plack,
An' Jenny's bawbee.

—Old Song.

Nae howdie gets a social night,
Or plack frae them.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Stretch a joint to catch a plack,
Abuse a brother to his back.

—BURNS: To Gavin Hamilton.

The word is probably derived from the ancient Flemish coin, a plaquette, current before the introduction into the Netherlands of the French money, reckoned by francs and centimes.

Plea, a lawsuit; the substitution of the aggregate of law for the segregate. The English verb, to plead, has received in Scottish parlance a past tense which does not correctly belong to it, in the phrase, "he pled guilty," instead of "he pleaded guilty," as if plead were a word of Teutonic origin and subject to the Teutonic inflexion which governs most of the ancient English verbs, which are derived from the Dutch, German, or Danish, such as "bleed, bled;" "blow, blew;" "run, ran;" "freeze, froze," &c. &c. Verbs derived from the Latin and French cannot be correctly conjugated in the past tense, except by the addition of d or ed to the infinitive, as in "coerce, coerced;" "plead, pleaded."

Nae plea is best. (It is best not to go to law at all.)—Old Proverb.

When neighbours anger at a plea,
The barley hree
Cements the quarrel.—BURNS.

Pliskie, a trick, a prank. From the Gaelic plaosgach, a sudden noise, a flash, a blaze.

Her lost militia fired her blood,
Deil na they never mas do guid,
Played her that pliskie.

—BURNS: Author's Earnest Cry and Prayer.

Ghaist! ma certie, I sall ghaist them!
If they had their heads as muckle on their wark as on her daffins, they wadna play sic pliskies!—SCOTT: St. Ronan's Well.

Plooky, swollen, blotchy, pimpled. From the Gaelic ploc, a tumour, a bunch, a knob, a swelling. The English slang bloke, a swell, is probably from the same root.

Plooky, plooky are your cheeks,
And plooky is your chin,
And plooky are your armis twa
My bonnie queen's layne in.

—SCOTT's Minstrels of the Scottish Border: Sir Hugh Le Blonde.

Plotcock, the devil; the dweller in the pit of hell, the fiend, the arch enemy. This singular word, or combination of words, appears in Jamieson as "from the Icelandic Blotgod, a name of the Scandinavian Pluto; or blotkok—from blot, to sacrifice; and koka, to swallow—i.e., the swallower of sacrifices." May not a derivation be found nearer home than in Iceland: in the Gaelic blot (pronounced plot), a pit, a cavern; and cog, to conspire, to tempt, to cheat?

Since you can cog, I'll play no more with you.

—SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost.

Lies, coggeries, and impostures.

—NARES.

The Kymric has coeglaw, or cogio, to cheat, to trick. To cog dice was to load the dice for the purpose of cheating; and cogger, in old English, signified a swindler, a cheat. This derivation would signify the cheat, the tempter who dwells in the cavern or bottomless pit of hell; and might have been included by Burns in his "Address to the Deil," among the other names which he bestows upon that personage.

Plout, plouter, to wade with difficulty through mire or water; akin to the English plod, as in the line in Gray's Elegy:—

The ploughman homewards plods his weary way.

From the Gaelic plodan, a clod of mud or mire, a small pool of water; plodanachd, the act of paddling in the water or the mud.

Plouting through thick and thin.

—GROSE.

Many a weary plouter she cost him
Through gutters and glaur.

—JAMIESON: Popular Ballads.

Had it no been, Mr. North, for your plowterin' in a' the rivers and lochs o'
Scotland, like a Newfoundland dog.

—Nectes Ambrosianæ.

Ploy, a plot, scheme, contrivance.

I wish he mayna hae been at the bottom
o' the ploy himsel'.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Pluff, a slight emission or short puff of smoke, either from a tobacco-pipe or of gas from a burning coal; possibly of the same derivation as the English puff, a slight, short or sudden movement of the wind or the breath.

Pockpud, an abbreviation of the contemptuous epithet of pock-pudding applied by the Scottish multitude to the English, in the bygone days when the English were as unpopular in Scotland as the Scotch still are among the more ignorant of the lower classes in England.

They gloom, they glower, they look sae big,
At ilka stroke they fell a Whig;
They'll fright the fuds o' the Pockpuds,
For mony a buttock 's bare coming.

—Jacobite Song, 1745.

The English pockpuddings ken nae better.—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Waverley.

Pock-shakings, a humorous and vulgar term applied to the last born child of a large family, expressive of the belief that no more are to be expected.

Point, to lay a distraint on a debtor's goods, to make a seizure for non-payment or arrears of rent. The word was once current in English, and survives in a corrupt form, as impound, and pound, an enclosure for stray cattle. The officer whose duty it was to impound was formerly called a pindar, a word that survives in tradition or legend in the "Pindar of Wakefield," celebrated in connection with the deeds, real or fabulous, of Robin Hood and his merry band of poachers and outlaws. The etymology is from the French poigne, the closed fist, and empoigner, to seize. Multiple-poinding is a Scottish law-phrase, expressive of a series of poindings.

An' was na I a weary wight,
They poind'd my gear and slew my knight:
My servants a' for life did flee,
An' left me in extremitie.

—Lament of the Border Widow.

"A puir poind" signifies a weak, silly person, metaphorically applied to one who is not substantial enough to take hold of, intellectually or morally; one of no account or importance.

Point, an old Scottish word for state of body; almost equivalent to the modern "form," which implies good condition generally of body, mind, and manners.

Murray said that he never saw the Queen in better health or in better point.—ROBERTSON: History of Mary Queen of Scots.

This is a French idiom, nearly allied to that which is now familiar to English ears, en bon point. "In better point" signifies more plump, or in fuller habit of body.—JAMIESON.

The word point has so many meanings, all derivable from and traceable to the Latin punctus, such as the point of a weapon; puncture, the pinch of a sharp weapon; punctual, true to the point of time, or the time appointed, &c., as to suggest that the etymology of point, in the sense of the French en bon point, and of the old Scotch, as used by Robertson in his reference to Queen Mary, must be other than punctus. En bon point is euphemistic for stout, fat, fleshy, inclining to corpulency—all of which words imply the reverse of pointed. It is possible that the true root is the Gaelic bun (b pronounced as p), foundation, root; applied to one who is in solid and substantial health or condition of body; well formed and established, physically and morally. The word is indicative of stability rather than of sharpness or pointedness. The now current slang of "form," derived from the language of grooms, jockeys, and racing men, springs from the same idea of healthiness and good condition. The Gaelic bunanta signifies firm, well-set, and established. The colloquial and vulgar word bum is from the same root of bun, and produces fundament; the French fondement, the bottom, the foundation.

Post, to tramp, to tread. To post the linen was to tread upon it with the bare feet in the washing-tub, a common practice among the women of the working-classes in Scotland. Seen for the first time by English travellers in the far North, the fashion excited not only their surprise, but sometimes their admiration, by the display of the shapely limbs of the bonnie Highland and Lowland lassies engaged in the work, with their petticoats kilted up to the knee, without the faintest suspicion of immodesty. Post is derived from the Gaelic, "to tread;" postadh, treading; postanach, a little child that is just beginning to walk or tread. The word is thus of a different origin and meaning from post, an office, a station, a place, which is derived from the Latin positum. The post-office and the postal service, words which are common to nearly all the European languages, are more probably traceable to the Gaelic and Celtic source, in the sense of tread and tramp, than to the Latin positum. The postman treads his accustomed rounds to the great convenience of the public in all civilised countries.

In scouring woollen clothes or coarse linen when the strength of arm and manual friction are found insufficient, the Highland women put them in a tub with a proper quantity of water, and then with petticoats tucked up commence the operation of posting. When three women are engaged, one commonly tramps in the middle, and the others tramp around her. This process is called postadh.—ARMSTRONG'S Gaelic Dictionary, 1820.

Pot, a deep pool, or eddy in a river.

The neist step that she waded in,
She waded to the chin;
The deepest pot in Clyde water
They gat sweet Willie in.

—Ballad of Willie and May Margaret.

Pow or powe, the head; from the old English poll. The impost called the "Poll-tax," that created such great dissatisfaction in the days of Wat Tyler, was a personal tax on the head or poll.

There is little wit in his pow
That lights the candle at the low [or fire].
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The miller was of manly make,
To meet him was nae mow [joke];
There durst not ten cum him to take,
Sae noytit [thumped] he their pows.
—Christ's Kirk on the Green.

Fat pouches bode lean pows.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Blessings on your frosty pow,
John Anderson, my jo.
—BURNS.

Powsoudie. Sheep's head broth. This word occurs in the humorous ballad by Francis Sempie, "Fy let us a' to the bridal," which contains an ample list of all the dainty entables served up at a marriage-feast among the rural population of Scotland in the seventeenth century.

And there'll be fadges and bracken,
And fouth o' gude gebbocks o' skate,
Powsoudie and drammock and crowdie,
And caller nowte-feet on a plate.
—WATSON'S Collection, 1706.

The word is compounded of pow, the head, and soudie, broth.

Powt, a young fowl or chicken; from the French, poule and poulte; in English, poultry and poultre.

Ye peep (chirp or pipe) like a powt,
O Tammy, my man, are ye turned a saunt?
—HEW AINSLEE: Tam o' the Balloch.

Free, to taste, to sip, "to pre the mou," to kiss the mouth. A story has long been current that a young English nobleman, visiting at Gordon Castle, had boasted that during his six weeks' shooting in the north he had acquired so much Scotch that it was impossible to puzzle him. The beautiful and celebrated Duchess of Gordon took up his challenge, and defied him to interpret the sentence, "Come pre my bonnie mou, my canty callant." It was with intense disgust that he afterwards learned what a chance he had lost by his ignorance.

Ye tell me that my lips are sweet,
Sic tales I doubt are a' deceit,
At any rate it's hardly meet,
To pre their sweets before folk.
—CHAMBERS'S Scotch Songs: Behave Yoursel before Folk.

Preen, a pin; from the Gaelic prine, a pin; prineachan, a little pin; prinich, to secure with pins.

Prick-me-dainty, prick-ma-leerie. These two apparently ridiculous phrases have the same meaning, that of a finical, conceited, super-fine person, in his manners or dress, one who affects airs of superiority—without the necessary qualifications for the part he assumes. Jamieson suggests that prick-me-dainty is from the English prick-me-daintily! Of prick-ma-leerie, he conjectures nothing. Both phrases seem to be traceable to the Gaelic breagh, fine, beautiful, braw; and deanta, complete, finished, perfected; and leor or leoir, enough, sufficient, entirely; so that prick-me-dainty resolves itself into a corruption of breagh-me-deanta, I am beautifully perfect; and prick-ma-leerie into breagh-ma-leor, I am beautiful entirely. A comic and scornful depreciation underlies both phrases.

Prig, to cheapen, to beat down the price; whence the English word prig, a conceited person, who thinks he knows better than other people. The English, "to prig," in the sense of committing a petty theft, appears to have no connection with the Scottish word.

Men who grew wise priggin' ower hops and raisins.

—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Ane o' the street-musician crew
Is busy priggin' wi' him now;
An' twa auld sangs he swears are new,
He pawns on Jock;
For an auld hod o' coals half fou,
A weel-matched troke.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: Coal Jock.

Jamieson defines to prig as to haggle, and derives it from the Flemish prachgen, to beg; French briguer, barter, from brigue, "rechercher avec ardeur."

Prig.—I don't know how this word in Scotch means to cheapen, and in English to steal; perhaps there is some connection which a knowledge of the root from which it comes would help us to understand. Prig, as a conceited person, is purely a conventional use of the word. Prig in Scotch has also the meaning of earnestly to entreat. "I prigged wi' him for mair nor an' hour that he shouldna leave me."
—R. DRENNAN.

Prink and preen. Prink signifies to adorn, to dress out in finery;

preen or prein, a pin—or to pin; and preen-head, a pin's head.

She has prinked hersell and preen'd hersell
By the ae light o' the mune,
And she's awa to Castelhaugh
To speak wi' young Tamlane.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border:
Ballad of the Young Tamlane.

Prinkling, a slight pricking; a tingling sensation, either of pain or pleasure.

Her wily glance I'll ne'er forget,
The dear, the lovely blinkin' o't,
Has pierced me through and through the heart,
And plagues me in the prinkling o't.
The parson kissed the tinker's wife,
An' coudna preach for thinking o't.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs: Love's Like a Dizziness.

Prog, to goad, to stab, to thrust, to prick, to probe; metaphorically, to taunt, to gibe, to provoke by a sarcastic remark; a sting, a lance, an arrow. From the Kymric proc, a thrust; and prociaw, to thrust or stab.

Propine, a gift, or the power of giving. Also drink-money—equivalent to the German word trink-geld, the French pour boire, and the English tip. To propine also means to pledge another in drinking, or to touch glasses in German fashion.

If I were there and in thy propine,
Oh, what wad ye do to me.

—Border Minstrelsy: Lady Anne.

Puirtith, poverty.

Oh puirtith cauld, and restless love,
Ye wreck my peace atween ye;
Yet puirtith a' I could forgie,
An' 'twerna for my Jeanie.

—BURNS.

Punchy, thick, short, squat, and broad; applied to the human frame. From the Gaelic bun, foundation; and bunaich, to establish firmly on a broad foundation.

Purlicue, the unnecessary flourish which people sometimes affix at the end of their signatures; also, a whim, a caprice; and, in derision, the summing up of a judgment, and the peroration of a sermon or a speech. The French par la queue, by the tail or finish, has been suggested as the derivation.

Puslic (more properly buslick), a cow-sherd, gathered in the fields when dried by the weather, and stored for winter fuel by the poor. According to Jamieson, this is a Dumfriesshire and Galloway word, and used in such phrases as "dry as a puslick," and "as light as a puslick." It is compounded of the two Gaelic words buac, cow-dung; and leag, a dropping, or to drop or let fall: used in a similar sense to the English "horse-droppings," applied to the horse-dung gathered in the roads.

Pyle, a small quantity; small as a hair, or as a grain. From the Latin pilus, French poil.

The cleanest corn that e'er was dight
May hae some pyles o' caff in.

—BURNS: The Unco Guid.

Pyot, a magpie; from the Gaelic pighe, a bird.

I tent it a pyot
Sat chatterin' on the house heid.

—ANDREW SUTAR: Symon and Janet.

Q

Quarters, a place of residence or abode, a domicile, an apartment or lodging.

An' it's oh for siccan quarters

As I gat yesternight.

—King James V.: We'll Gang Nae Mair a-Rovin.

Quarters, in this sense, is not derived from quatuor, or from the fourth part, as is generally asserted in the dictionaries, and exemplified by the common phrase, "From which quarter does the wind blow?" i.e., from which of the four points of the compass? The true derivation of quarter, the French quartier, and of the military functionary, the Quarter-master General, is the Gaelic cuairt, a circle. "Paris," says Bescherelle in his French Dictionary, "was formerly divided into four quarters; it is now divided into forty-eight, which, if quarters were translated into circle, would not be an incongruous expression, as it is when quarter represents a fourth part only." The French use the word arrondissement in the same sense, which supports the Gaelic etymology. The quarter or habitation of a bird is its nest, which is a circle. "The circle of one's acquaintance," and "the social circle," are common expressions; and the points of the compass are all points in a circle, which, as all navigators know, are considerably more than four.

Quean, wench, winklot. These are all familiar or disrespectful terms for a woman.

I wat she was a cantie quean,
And weel could dance the Highland
walloch.

—Roy's Wife.

By that the dancin' was all done,
Their leave took less or mair,
When the winklots and the woers turn'd
To see it was heart-sair.

—Pebbles to the Play.

Quean, like queen, seems to originate in the Greek γυνή, a woman; Danish quinde, a woman; quindelig, feminine; Gaelic gin, to beget, to generate; gineal, offspring. Wench, by the common change of gu into we, as in war for guerre, is from the same root. Winklot, or wenchlet, as a little wench or quean, is of the same parentage.

Queer cuffin. English and Scottish gipsy slang—a justice of the peace. This phrase is of venerable antiquity, and is a relic of the Druidical times when the arch-druid, or chief priest, was called coibhi (coivi), since corrupted into cuffin. The arch-druid was the chief administrator of justice, and sat in his coir, or court (whence queer), accessible to all suplicants; like Joshua, Jephtha, Eli, and Samuel, judges of Israel. A Druidical proverb, referring to this august personage of the olden time, is still current among the Gaelic-speaking population of the Highlands, that "the stone is not nearer to the ground on which it rests, than is the ear of Coibhi to those who apply to him for justice."

Queet, an ankle; sometimes written cute (which see).

The firstan step that she stept in,
She steppit to the queet;

"Ochone! alas!" said that lady,
"The water's wondrous deep."

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: The Drowned Lovers.

I let him cool his cutes at the door.

—JAMIESON: Aberdeenshire Proverb.

Quey, a young cow; from the Danish quay, cattle, the German vieh, the Dutch and Flemish vee.

Amang the brachans on the brae,
Between her and the moon,
The Deil, or else some outler quey,
Gat up and gae a croon.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

The cow was eager to browse the pasture on which she had been fed when she was a young and happy quey.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

R

Rad, to fear, to be afraid, or to guess.

I am right rad of treasonry.
—Song of the Outlaw Murray.

O ance ye danced upo' the knowes,
And ance ye lightly sang,
But in herrying o' a bee byke
I'm rad ye gat a stang.
—BURNS: Ye hae been a' wrang, Lassie.

Jamieson derives rad from the Danish raed, afraid, which meets the sense of the passage in which it is used by Burns. The sense, however, would be equally well rendered by a derivation from the Danish, Flemish, and Dutch raad, German rathen, to guess or conjecture.

Ram and ran. The Scottish language contains many expressive and humorous words commencing with the syllables ram and ran, which are synonymous, and imply force, roughness, disorder; and which appear to be primarily derived from the Gaelic ran, to roar, to bluster. Among others are—randy, violent or quarrelsome; rampage, a noisy frolic, or an outburst of ill-humour, a word which Charles Dickens revived and rendered popular in the English vernacular; ramgunshock, rough, rugged, coarse; ramshackle, old, worn out with rough usage.

Our ramgunshock glum gudeman,
Is out and owre the water.
—BURNS: Had I the Wyt.

Rangunshock. This seems to be a corruption of the Gaelic ran, to roar; gun, without; and seach (pronounced shach), alternation, i.e., to roar incessantly, without alternation of quiet.

Rant, to be noisily joyous; rants, merry-makings, riotous but joyous gatherings; ranter, a merry-maker. From the Gaelic.

My name is Rob the ranter.
—Maggie Lauder.

From out the life o' publick haunts,
But thee, what were our fairs and rants,
Ev'n godly meetings o' the saunts
By thee inspired.
When gapin' they besiege, the tents
Are doubly fired.
—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Rattan, rottan, a rat. In Flemish the word is written rat or rot. Baudrons, in the following quotation, is a familiar name for a cat.

Then that curst carmagnole, old Satan,
Watches like baudrons by a rattan,
Our sinful souls to get a claut on.
—BURNS: Colonel De Peysten.

"Wonderful man, Dr. Candlish," said one clergyman to another. "What versatility of talent. He's fit for anything!"
"Aye, aye! that's true; put him doon a hole, he'd make a capital rottan!"—Anecdotes of Scottish Wit and Humour.

Rax, to reach; raught, reached; a corruption, or perhaps the original of the modern English word.

Never rax aboon your reach.

The auld guidman raught down the pock.
—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

And ye may rax Corruption's neck,
And gi'e her for dissection.

—BURNS: A Dream.

"Rax me a spaul o' that bubbly Jock."
Reach me a wing of that turkey.—DEAN RAMSAY.

Ream, to froth like beer, or sparkle like wine, to effervesce, to cream; from the German rahmen, to froth; rahm, yeast; Flemish room.

Fast by an ingle, bleezing finely,
Wi' reaming swats that drank divinely.

The swats sae reamed in Tammy's noddle,
Fair play! he cared na deils a boddle.
—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

The nappy reeks wi' mantling ream.
—BURNS: The Twa Dogs.

That merry night we got the corn in,
Oh sweetly then thou reams the horn in.
—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Reaming dish, a shallow dish for containing the milk until it is ready for being creamed.

Red-wud, stark, raging mad.

And now she's like to run red-wud
About her whisker.

—BURNS: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

Red, used as an intensive prefix to a word, is not uncommon in English and Scottish literature. Red vengeance is a vengeance that demands blood; and possibly red-wud may mean a madness that prompts blood.

In Gaelic the great deluge is called the Dile Ruadh, or red-flood.

Rede, advice, counsel.

Rede me nocht, quod Reason,
No ruth to have
Till lords and ladies
Loves alle truth
And hates alle harlotrie.

—Vision of Piers Ploughman.

Short rede is good rede.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

I rede ye weel—tak care o' skaithe—
See there's a gullie!

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Ye gallants wight, I rede ye right,
Beware o' bonnie Anne.

—BURNS.

This word was once good English, as appears from the extract from "Piers Ploughman," and was used by Chaucer, Gower, and Shakespeare. It is either from the Flemish and Dutch raed, counsel; the German reden, to speak; or the Gaelic radh, raidh, or raile, a saying, an aphorism.

Renchel, a tall, lean, lanky person; from the Gaelic reang, or reing, thin, lean; and gillie, a youth, a young man, a fellow.

He's naething but a lang renchel.

—JAMIESON.

Rhaim, Rhame. According to Jamieson, these words signify either a commonplace speech, a rhapsody; or "to run over anything in a rapid and unmeaning way," "to repeat by rote, to reiterate." He thinks it a corruption of rhyme, "because proverbs were anciently expressed in a sort of rhyme."

Is not the true derivation of the word the Teutonic rahm, the Flemish room, froth; to ream, to cream, to froth, to effervesce like soda-water or champagne? "A frothyspeaker" is a common expression of disparagement.

Rickle or ruckle, a loose heap; riekler, a term of contempt applied to a bad architect or builder.

I'm grown so thin; I'm naething but a rickle o' banes.—JAMIESON.

The proud Percy caused hang five of the Laird's henchmen at Alnwick for burning a rickle of houses.

SCOTT: The Monastery.

A wild goose out o' season is but a ruckle o' banes.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Rigging. In English this word is seldom used except in reference to ships, and the arrangements of their masts, spars, ropes, &c. In the Scottish language it is employed to signify the roof, cross-beams, &c., of a house.

This is no my ain house,

I ken by the rigging o't;

Since with my love I've changed vows,

I dinna like the bigging [building] o't.

—ALLAN RAMSAV.

There by the ingle-cheek

I sat,

And heard the restless rattons squeak

About the riggin'.

—BURNS: The Vision.

The word is derived from the Teutonic ruck, the Flemish rug, a ridge, top, or back; whence the ridge at the top of the house, the roof. The rigging tree is the roof tree. The rigging of a vessel is in like manner the roof, or ridge of a ship, as distinguished from the hull. So the colloquial expression to "rig out," to dress, to accoutre, to adorn, to put the finishing touch to one's attire, comes from the same idea of completion, which is involved in the rigging of a ship or of a house.

Rigwoodie, old, lean, withered.

Withered beldams, auld and droll,
Rigwoodie hags.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Rigwoodie.—"Old, lean, withered." Mr. Robert Chambers says it means "worthy of the gallows." Neither of these meanings is correct. Rigwoodie is the name of the chain or rope which passes across the saddle to support the shafts of a cart or other conveyance—what an Englishman would call the back band. This very likely was anciently made of twisted woodies or sangh or willow wands, now it is generally made of twisted chain and of iron. By a very evident metonymy Burns applied the twisted wrinkled appearance of a rigwoodie to these old wrinkled hags.
—R. DRENNAN.

Rind or rhynd, hoar frost; a corruption of the English rime, or possibly of the Kymric rhym, great cold; rhyme, to shiver. Jamieson derives the Scottish rhynd and the English rime from the Anglo-Saxon hrim, and the Dutch and Flemish rym; but in these languages rym—more correctly rijm—signifies rhyme, in versification, not rime or frost. Rhind is all but obsolete in Lowland Scotch, and has been superseded by cranreuch, sometimes written crandruch, a particularly cold and penetrating mist or fog. The etymology is uncertain, but the word is most probably a corruption and mispronunciation by the Lowland Scotch of the Gaelic grainn, horrible; whence cranreuch, from grainn and driugh, penetrate, ooze, drip; whence also the word drook, to saturate with moisture, and drookit, wet through. Jamieson derives cranreuch from the Gaelic cranntar-ach, but no such word is to be found in the Gaelic dictionaries of Armstrong, Macleod, and Dewar, MacAlpine, or the Highland Society of Edinburgh.

When hailstones drive wi' bitter skyte,
And infant frosts begin to bite
In hoary cranreuch drest.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

The French word for hoar-frost or cranreuch is verglas, which is also of Gaelic origin, from fuair, cold, and glas, grey.

Ringled-eyed, squinting.

He's out-shinned, in-kneed, and ringled-eyed too,

Auld Rob Morris is the man I'll ne'er lo'e.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: Auld Rob Morris.

Rink, a space cleared out and set aside for sport or jousting, and in winter for curling or skating on the ice.

Trumpets and shalms with a shout
Played ere the rink began,
And equal judges sat about
To see wha tint or wan
The field that day.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Evergreen.

Then Stevan cam steppand in,
Nae rink might him arrest.

—Christ's Kirk on the Green.

Jamieson derives rink from the English ring, a circle; but it is more probably from the Gaelic rianaich, to arrange, to set in order, to prepare.

Ripp, a handful of unthrashed ears of corn pulled out of the sheaf or stack to give to an animal; from the Gaelic reub, to rend, to pull out.

A guid New Year I wish thee, Maggie;
Hae! there's a ripp to thy auld baggie.

—BURNS: Auld Farmer to his Auld Mare Maggie.

Az' tent their duty, e'en and morn,
Wi' teats o' hay and ripps o' corn.

—BURNS: Mailie, the Author's Pet Yowe.

Rippet, a slight matrimonial quarrel. The word seems to be derived either from the Gaelic riapaladh, mismanagement, bungling, misunderstanding, or from reubte, a rent, from reub, to tear, to rend, to pull asunder; the English rip, or rip up.

Mr. Mair, a Scotch minister, was rather short tempered, and had a wife named Rebecca, whom, for brevity sake, he called Beckie. He kept a diary, and among other entries this one was very frequent. "Beckie and I had a rippet, for which I desire to be humble." A gentleman who had been on a visit to the minister went to Edinburgh and told the story to a minister and his wife there, when the lady replied, "Weel, weel! he must have been an excellent man that Mr. Mair. My husband and I sometimes have rippets, but deil tak' me if he's ever humble."—DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

Rippet means a noise or disturbance of any kind, not specifically and only a domestic quarrel between husband and wife. I have often been told by my mother, when a boy, to be "quate and no breed sic a rippet."—R. DRESSMAN.

Rispië, a bulrush; the badge of the clan Mackay, worn in the bonnet.

Among the greene rispiës and the reeds.
—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Evergreen—The Golden Terge.

Jamieson erroneously defines rispië to mean coarse grass, and derives the word from the English rasp, to scrape, with which, however, it has not the slightest connection. It seems to be derived from the Gaelic rias, or riasy, a moor, a fen, a marsh, where bulrushes grow; and thus to signify a marsh flower or bulrush.

Ritt, to thrust with a weapon, to stab. The etymology cannot be traced to the Gaelic, the German, the Flemish, or any other of the known sources of the Scottish language. Jamieson seems to think it signifies to scratch with a sharp instrument. It is possibly a corruption of right; "ritted it through" may mean, drove it right through.

Young Johnston had a rust-brown sword
Hung low down by his gair (belt),
And he ritted it through the young Colonel,
That word he never spak mair.

—MOTHERWELL'S Collection: Ballad of Young Johnson.

Roddins, the red berries of the hawthorn, the wild rose, the sweet briar, and the mountain ash, more commonly called rowan, or rodden, in Scotland; from the Gaelic ruadh, red. Jamieson confines the use of the word to the berries of the mountain ash, but in this he is mistaken, as appears from the following:—

I've mair need o' the roddins, Willie,
That grow on yonder thorn.

He's got a bush o' roddins till her
That grew on yonder thorn,
Likewise a drink o' Maywell water
Out o' his grass-green horn.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads, vol. ii.:
The Earl of Douglas and Dame Oliphant.

Roop, roup, to call out, especially if the voice be harsh and rough; roopet or roupit, rendered hoarse by cold or by violent vociferation. This word seems to be from the Flemish roop, to cry out; the German rufen, to call.

Alas! my roupit Muse is hearse.

—BURNS: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

Here the poet is guilty of a pleonasm, unusual with one so terse in expression, of using in one line the two synonymous words of roupit and hearse (hoarse). But he was sorely in need of a rhyme for the coarse but familiar word in the third line of the poem. Roup also signifies a sale by auction, from the "crying out" of the person who offers the goods for sale.

Roose, rouse, to praise or extol; and thence, it has been supposed, by extension of meaning, to drink a health to the person praised; also, any drinking-bout or carousal. The etymology of roose, in the sense of to praise, as used in Scotland, is unknown. Rouse, in the sense of a drinking-bout, has been held by some to be a corruption of carouse, and by others, of the German exclamation, heraus! signifying "empty the cup or glass," drink it!

Rouse the ford as ye find it.

Rouse the fair day at e'en.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

To roose ye up and ca' ye guid,
An' sprang o' great an' noble bluid.

—BURNS: To Gavin Hamilton.

He roos'd my e'en sae bonnie blue,
He roos'd my waist sae genty sma'.

—BURNS: Young Jockey.

Some o' them hae roosed their hawks,
And other some their houndes,
And other some their ladies fair.

—MOTHERWELL'S Ancient Minstrelsy.

In all the above quotations the meaning of roose is clearly to praise or extol. But the English rouse has not that meaning.

No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the kings rouse, the heavens shall bruit again,
Bespeaking earthly thunder.

—SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet.

I have took since supper a rouse or two too much.

—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

It is thus clear that the Scottish roose and the English rouse are of different origin. The German rausch, and the Dutch and Flemish roes, signify semi-intoxication; roesig, in these languages, means nearly drunk, or, as the French phrase it, "entre deux vins," or, as the English slang expresses it, "half seas over." In Swedish, rus signifies drunkenness; taga rus, to get drunk; and rusig, inebriated. In Danish, ruus signifies drunkenness, and ruse, intoxicating liquor. Nares rightly suspected that the English rouse was of Danish origin. The passage in Hamlet, act i. scene 4—

The king doth wake to-night and takes his rouse, signifies the king takes his drink, and all the other instances quoted by Nares are susceptible of the same interpretation. Nares quotes from Harman's "Caveat for Common Cursitors," 1567:—

I thought it my bounden duty to acquaint your goodness with the abominable, wicked, and detestable behaviour of all these rousey, ragged rabblement of rake-hells.

He defines rowsey in this passage to mean dirty, but, in view of the Danish, Dutch, and Flemish derivations, it ought to be translated drunken.

Row, to enwrap, to entwine, to enfold, also to roll or flow onwards like the wavelets on the river; from the Gaelic ruith (rut), to flow, to ripple.

Hap and row, hap and row,
Hap and row the feetie o't,
It is a wee bit erie thing,
I downa bide the greetie o't.

—Creech.

Then round she row'd her silken plaid.
—Ballad of Fremmet Hall.

Where Cart runs rowan' to the sea.
—BURNS.

Rowan, the mountain ash; a tree that grows in great perfection in the Highlands of Scotland, and named from its beautiful red berries, ruadh, the Gaelic for red. This tree, or a twig of it, is supposed, in the superstition of Scotland, to be a charm against witchcraft. Hence, it has been supposed, but without sufficient authority, that the phrase, "Aroint thee, witch," in Shakspeare, is a misprint for "a rowan-tree, witch!" The word occurs in no author previous to Shakspeare.

The night was fair, the moon was up,
The wind blew low among the gowans,
Or fitful rose o'er Athole woods,
An' shook the berries frae the rowans.
—The Wraith of Garry Water.

Rowan tree and red thread
Mak' the witches tyne [lose] their speed.
—Old Scottish Proverb.

Rowt, to bellow or low like cattle; from the Gaelic roiteach, bellowing. Nares erroneously renders it "snore." "The rabble rowt," i.e., the roaring rabble, the clamorous multitude.

The kye stood routin in the loan.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Nae mair thou'lt rowt out o'er the dale,
Because thy pasture's scanty.
—BURNS: The Ordination.

And the king, when he had righted himself on the saddle, gathered his breath, and cried to do me nae harm; "for," said he, "he is ane o' our Norland stots, I ken by the rowt o' him;" and they a' laughed and rowted loud eneuch.—SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel.

Rowth, plenty, abundance; a word formed from roll and roll-eth, Scottish row. It is expressive of the same idea as in the English phrase, applied to a rich man, "He rolls in wealth." A peculiarly Scottish word which never seems to have been English. It has been suggested that it is derived from the Gaelic ruathar, a sudden rush, onset, or inpouring; whence metaphorically, a sudden or violent influx of wealth or abundance.

A rowth o' auld knick-knackets,
Rusty airm caps, and jingling jackets.
—BURNS: Captain Grasse.

The ingle-neuk, with rowth o' bannocks and bairns!—DEAN RAMSAY: A Scottish Toast or Sentiment.

A rowth aumrie and a close nieve.—
JAMIESON.

It's ye have woovers mony a ane,
An' lassie ye're but young, ye ken,
Then wait a wee, and cannie wale,
A routhie butt, a routhie ben.
—BURNS: Country Lassie.

God grant your lordship joy and health,
Long days and rowth of real wealth.
—ALLAN RAMSAY: Epistle to Lord Dalhousie.

A houndless hunter and a gunless gunner see aye rowth o' game.—ALLAN
RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Fortune, if thou wilt give me still
Hale brecks, a scone, a whisky gill,
And rowth o' rhyme to rave at will,
Take a' the rest.
—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Roxle, to grunt, to speak with a hoarse voice; Gaelic roc, a hoarse voice; French rauque, hoarse; English rook, a bird that has a hoarse voice in cawing; Gaelic, rocair, a man with a hoarse voice; rocail, croaking. Mr. Herbert Coleridge, in his dictionary of "The Oldest Words in the English Language," from the semi-Saxon period of A.D. 1250 to A.D. 1800, derives it from the Dutch rotelen, but the word does not appear in any Dutch or Flemish dictionary.

Royet, wild, dissipated, riotous, unruly. Roit, according to Jamieson, is a term of contempt for a woman, often conjoined with an adjective, denoting bad temper; as, "an ill-natured roit." The resemblance to the English riot suggests its derivation from that word, but both royet and riot are traceable to the Gaelic raoit, noisy, obstreperous, or indecent mirth and revelry; and ruidhtear, a loud reveller; riatach, indecent, immodest. Jamieson, however, derives it from the French roide, stiff, which he wrongly translates fierce, ungovernable.

Royet lads may make sober men.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Ruddy, to roar like thunder, or to rumble like wind in the stomach. Derivation uncertain, but possibly akin to route or rowtin, the bellowing of cattle.

I in its wame heard Vulcan ruddy.

—BEATTIE: John o' Arnha.

Rude, the complexion; the ruddy face of a healthy person. From the Flemish rood, red, which has the same meaning; Gaelic ruath, red, corrupted by the Lowland Scotch into Roy, as in Rob Roy, Gilderoy, and applied to the hair as well as to the complexion.

Of all their maidens myld as meid
Was nane sae gymp as Gillie,
As ony rose her rude was reid,
Her lyre was like the lillie.

—Christ's Kirk on the Green.

She has put it to her roudes lip,
And to her roudes chin,
She has put it to her fause, fause mouth,
But never a drap gaed in.

—Border Minstrelsy: Prince Robert.

Sir Walter Scott, in a note to this ballad, glosses roudes by "haggard." Surely this is wrong?

Rug, to pull. Derivation uncertain.

Trying to rug them off, tae an' heel.—
Noctes Ambrosianae.

Rugg, a great bargain, a thing ridiculously cheap; to spoil, to plunder, to seize. From the Gaelic rug, the past tense of beir, to take hold of.

When borrowers brak, the pawns were rugg,

Rings, beads of pearl, or silver jug,
I sold them off—ne'er fashed my lug

Wi' gins or curses;
The mair they whinged, it gart me hug
My swelling purses.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: Last Speech of a Wretched Miser.

Rule the roast. This originally Scottish phrase has obtained currency in England, and excited much controversy as to its origin. It has been derived from the function of a chief cook, to be master or mistress in the kitchen, and as such, to "rule the roasting." It has also been derived from the mastery of the cock among the hens, as ruling the place where the fowls roost or sleep. In the Scottish language roost signifies the inner roof of a cottage, composed of spars or beams reaching from one wall to the other; the highest interior part of the building. Hence, to rule the roast, or roost, or to rule the house, to be the master.

Rummel, to make a confused sound; from rumble.

Your crackjaw words of half an ell,
That rummel like a witch's spell.

—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Rump, to break; rumpit, broken; or in English slang "to be cleaned out," or exhausted of money by losses at gambling. "Perhaps," says Jamieson, "in allusion to an animal whose tail has been cut off near the rump!" The etymology did not need the "perhaps" of the non-erudite author, and is to be found in the French rompre, to break, and rompu, broken.

Rumple-bane, the lowest bone of the spine.

At length he got a carline grey,
And she's come hirplin' hame, man,
And she fell o'er the buffet stool,
And brak her rumple-bane, man.

—JOHNSON'S Musical Museum.

Rung, a cudgel, a staff, a bludgeon, the step of a ladder; any thick strong piece of wood that may be wielded in the hand as a weapon. From the Gaelic rong, which has the same meaning. The modern Irish call a bludgeon a shillelah; also a Gaelic word for scileach, a willow, and slaith (sla), a wand.

Auld Scotland has a raucle tongue,
She's just a deevil wi' a rung.

—BURNS.

Runk, to whisper secret slanders, also a term of opprobrium applied to an old woman, a gossip, or a scandal-monger. From the Gaelic runach, dark, mysterious, also a confidant; run, a secret, a mystery; and by extension of the original meaning, a scandal repeated under the pretence of a secret and confidential disclosure.

Runt, a deprecatory or contemptuous name for an old woman; from the German rind, and the Flemish rund, an ox, or a cow that calves no longer; also, the hard stalk of kail or cabbage left in the ground, that has ceased to sprout.

Ruther. This word, according to Jamieson, means to storm, to bluster, to roar, also an uproar or commotion. It is probably from the Gaelic rutharach, quarrelsome, contentious, and rutha-rachd, quarrelsomeness.

Ryg-bane, or rig-bane, the spine or backbone; from the Flemish rug, the German rucken, the back, and bein, a bone. The original meaning of rug and rucken is that of extension in length; from the Gaelic ruig, to extend, to reach, and ruigh, or righe, an arm; ruighe (the English ridge) is the extension of a mountain, or of a series of hills forming, as it were, the spine or backbone of the land.

Saikless, innocent, guiltless; from the Teutonic sach, the cause; whence sachless, or saikless, without cause.

"Oh, is this water deep," he said,
"As it is wondrous dim;
Or is it sic as a saikless maid,
And a leal true knight may swim?"
—Ballad of Sir Roland.

Leave off your douking on the day,
And douk upon the night,
And where that saikless knight lies slain,
The candles will burn bright.
—Border Minstrelsy: Earl Richard.

Sain, to bless, to preserve in happiness; from the German seggen, to bless, and segen, a benediction; Flemish zegenen—all probably from the Latin sanus.

Sain yoursel frae the deil and the laird's bairns.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Sairing, enough, that which satisfies one; used both in a favourable and unfavourable sense. "He got his sairin," applied to a drubbing or beating; in the ironical sense, he got enough of it, or, as Jamieson phrases it in English, "he got his bellyfull of it." A corruption of serve, or serve the purpose—therefore, a sufficiency.

You couldna look your sairin at her face,
So meek it was, so sweet, so fu' o' grace.
—ROSS'S Helenore.

Sairy or sair, very, or very great; from the German sehr, as in sehr schön, sehr gut, very fair, very good; sometimes used in English in the form of sore; as, "sore distressed," very much distressed.

And when they meet wi' sair disasters,
Like loss o' health or want o' masters.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

It's a sair dung bairn that mauna greet.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

It's a sair field where a' are slain.
—Idem.

The state of man does change and vary:
Now sound, now sick, now blythe, now
sary,

Now dansand merry, now like to dee.
—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Evergreen.

Sak, saik, sake, blame, guilt; whence sachless, sackless, saikless, guiltless, innocent; and also, by extension of meaning, foolish, worthless, as in the corresponding English word, "an innocent," to signify an imbecile.

The root of all these words appears to be either the German jach (see SAIKLESS, ante), or the Gaelic sag, weight; whence also sag, to weigh or press down, and sack, a bag to carry heavy articles. The idea of weight, as applied to guilt and blameworthiness, is obvious, as in the line quoted by Jamieson, "Mary was sackless o' breaking her vow," i.e., she was not burthened with the guilt of breaking her vow. A saukless person, or an imbecile, in like manner, is one who is not weighted with intellect. Sag, in English, is said of a rope not drawn tightly enough, and weighed down in the middle. It also signifies to bend or give way under pressure of weight.

The heart I bear
Shall never sag with doubt or shake with fear.—SHAKESPEARE.

"It is observable," says Dr. Johnson, "that sack (in the sense of a bag for carrying weight) is to be found in all languages, and is therefore conceived to be antediluvian." The phrase "sairsaught," quoted by Jamieson, and defined as signifying "much exhausted, and especially descriptive of bodily debility," is traceable to the same root, and might be rendered, sorely weighed down by weakness or infirmity. There is, however, in spite of these examples, much to be said in favour of the derivation from the German sach.

Sandie, Sanders, Sawney, Sannock, abbreviations of the favourite Scottish Christian name of Alexander; from the last two syllables. The English commonly abbreviate the first two syllables into Aleck. In the days immediately after the accession of James VI. to the English throne, under the title of James I., to the time of George III. and the Bute Administration, when Scotsmen were exceedingly unpopular, and when Dr. Samuel Johnson—the great Scoto-phobist, the son of a Scotch bookseller at Lichfield—thought it prudent to disguise his origin, and overdid his prudence by maligning his father's countrymen, it was customary to designate a Scotsman as a Sawney. The vulgar epithet, however, is fast dying out, and is nearly obsolete.

An', Lord! remember singing Sannock,
Wi' hale breeks, saxpence, and a bannock.

BURNS: To James Tail.

Sanshagh or sanshach. Jamieson defines this word as meaning wily, crafty, sarcastically clever, saucy, disdainful, and cites—"He's a sanshach callant, or chiel," is a phrase used in Aberdeenshire and the Mearns." He thinks it is derivable from the Gaelic saobh-nosach, angry, peevish, irascible; but it is more probable that it comes from sean, old, and seach (shach), dry or caustic, an old man of a cynical temper.

Sant or saunter. Jamieson defines this word as meaning "to disappear, to vanish suddenly out of sight," and quotes it as in use in Ettrick Forest. "It's santed, but it will, may be, cast up again." In Wright's "Dictionary of Obsolete and Provincial English," saunt, a northern word, is said to signify to vanish; and saum, to wander lazily about. The word is nearly, if not quite obsolete, and does not appear either in Burns or Allan Ramsay. Sant was formerly current in the same sense as saunter, to roam idly or listlessly about; to saum, to disappear from, or neglect one's work or duty. Johnson derived saunter from an expression said to have been used in the time of the crusades, in application to the idle vagabonds and impostors who roamed through the country and begged for money to help them on their way to the Holy Land, or La Sainte Terre. Saunter, as now used in English, is almost synonymous with the Scottish dauner, q.v. But no authoritative derivation has yet been discovered, either for sant or saunter, unless that given by Mr. Wedgwood, from the German schlendern, can be deemed satisfactory. In Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham's Essay on "Satire," saunter is used in a curiously unusual sense, an investigation of which may possibly throw light on the original meaning of the word.

While sauntering Charles betwixt so mean a brace [of mistresses],
Meets with dissembling still in either place,
Affected humour or a painted face;
In loyal libels we have often told him
How one has jilted him, the other sold him.

Was ever Prince by two at once misled,
Foolish and false, ill-natured and ill-bred?

Sir Walter Scott cites from the same author, in reference to the sauntering of Charles II. :—

In his later hours, there was as much laziness as love in all those hours he passed with his mistresses, who, after all, only served to fill up his seraglio, while a bewitching kind of pleasure called sauntering and talking without restraint, was the true sultana he delighted in.

In Gaelic sannt, and sanntaich, signifies to covet, to desire, to lust after; and if this be the true derivation of the word, the passage from the Duke of Buckingham would be exceedingly appropriate. To saunter was applied to idle men who followed women about the streets, with libidinous intent of admiration or conversation; sann-taire, a lustful man. The French have a little comedy entitled "Un monsieur qui suit les femmes," which expresses the idea of saunterer, as applied to Charles II.

Sap, a fool, a simpleton, a ninny. The English has milk-sop, an effeminate fool. Sap and sop are both derived from the Gaelic saobh, silly, foolish, as well as the English slang, soft, apt to be imposed upon.

Sark, the linen, woollen, silken, or cotton garment worn next to the skin by men and women; a shirt or shift; the French chemise, the German hemde. Weel-sarkit, well provided with shirts.

The last Hallowe'en I was wauken,
My droukit sark-sleeve as ye ken.

—BURNS: Tam Glen.

They reel'd, they sat, they crossed, they cleekit,
Till ilka carlin swat and reekit,
And coost her duddies to the wark,
And linkit at it in her sark!

Tam tint his reason a' thegither,
And roar'd out, "Weel done! Cutty sark!"
And in an instant a' was dark.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Being asked what was the difference between Presbyterian ministers, who wear no surplices, and Episcopalians, who do, an old lady replied, "Well, ye see, the Presbyterian minister wears his sark under his coat, the Episcopalian wears his sark aboon his coat."—DEAN RAMSAY.

The phrase, "sark-alane," is used to signify nude, with the exception of the shirt; and "a sarkfu' o' sair banes," to express the condition of a person suffering from great fatigue, or from a sound beating. The etymology of the word, which is peculiar to Scotland and the North of England, is uncertain. Attempts have been made to trace it from the Swedish, the Icelandic, the Anglo-Saxon, and the Greek, but without success.

In the "Dictionnaire de la Langue Romane, ou du Vieux Langage Française" (Paris, 1768), the Scottish word sark is rendered serecote, and serecot, "une camisole, une chemisette."

Saugh, a willow; the French saule, Gaelic seileag.

The glancin' waves o' Clyde Through saughs and hanging hazels glide.

—PINKERTON: Bothwell Bank.

Saulie, a hired mourner, a mute, or undertaker's man. The word seems to have been employed to express the mock or feigned sorrow assumed in the lugubrious faces of these men, and to be derived from the Gaelic sall, mockery, satire, derision; samhladh, an apparition, a ghost, has also been suggested as the origin of the word. The derivation of Jamieson from salve reginam is scarcely worthy of consideration.

Saur, to flavour; saurless, insipid, tasteless; supposed to be a corruption of savour. The French for a red herring is sauze; and saurir, or saurer, is to flavour with salt.

Scaff-raff, rubbish, refuse.

If you and I were at the Witherspoon's Latch, wi' ilka ane a gude oak hipple in his hand, we wadna turn back—no, not for half-a-dozen o' your scaff-raff.—SCOTT: Guy Mannering.

Jamieson, unaware of the indigenous roots of these words, derives them from the Swedish scaef, a rag, anything shaved off; and rafa, to snatch away. The true etymology, however, is from the Gaelic sgamh (pronounced scav), dross, dirt, rubbish; and rabh (raff), coarse, idle, useless.

Scag, to shrivel in the heat, or by exposure to the weather, to split, to crack in the heat; a term applied in the fishing villages of Scotland to fish, dried or fresh, that have been kept too long. "A scaggit haddie" is a haddock spoiled by long exposure. Jamie-son hesitates between the Icelandic skacka, inquare; and the Gaelic sgag, as the derivation of this word. Sgag, in Gaelic, signifies to shrivel up, to crack, to split, or to spoil and become putrid by long keeping; sgagta, lean, emaciated.

Scance, skance. To reflect upon a person's character or conduct by charge or insinuation; to censure, to taunt indirectly; to glance at a subject cursorily in conversation; also, a transient look at anything. These words are not used in English, though askance, a recognised English word, appears to be from the same root. The ordinary derivation of askance is either from the Italian schianco, athwart, or from the Flemish and Dutch schuin, oblique, to squint. The latter etymology, though it meets the English sense of the word, does not correspond with the variety of meanings in which it is employed in Scotland. Neither does it explain the English scan, to examine, to scrutinise,—still less the scan- ning, or scansion of the syllables or feet in a verse.

Perhaps the Gaelic sgath, a shadow, a reflection in the water or in a glass, sgathan (sga-an), a mirror, and sgathanaich, to look in a glass, may supply the root of the Scottish, if not the English words. Tried by these tests, scance might signify to cast a shadow or a reflection upon one, to take a rapid glance as of one's self in a glass; and to scan, to examine, to scrutinise, "to hold the mirror up to nature," as Shakspeare has it. In these senses, the word might more easily be derivable from the Gaelic, which does not imply obliquity, than from the Flemish and Dutch, of which obliquity is the leading, if not the sole idea, as in the English squint.

Then gently scan your brother man,
Still gentler sister woman;
Though they may gang a kennin' wrang,
To step aside is human.

—BURNS: Address to the Unco Guid.

To scan a verse, to examine or scrutinise whether it contains the proper number of feet or syllables, or is otherwise correct, may possibly be an offshoot of the same idea; though all the etymologists insist that it comes from the Italian scandio, to climb.

Scarnoch. A scarnoch o' words signifies a multitude of words, such as are unnecessarily used by wordy lawyers and by over garrulous Members of Parliament, who use them, as Solomon said in old times, "to darken counsel," and as a wise and cynical man of more modern days—the late Prince Talleyrand—said with equal appropriateness, "pour déguiser la pensée" (to disguise their thoughts). Scarnoch also signifies a tumultuous din, the murmur or shouting of a crowd, and scarochin, a great noise. Jamieson derives these words from the Swedish skara, a crowd, a cohort, but the true root is the Gaelic sgairn, to howl as dogs, wolves, or other animals, and sgarncach, howling, shrieking, roaring, &c.

Scart, a scratch; scart-free, without a scratch or injury. Scart is also a name given, in most parts of Scotland, to the rapacious sea-bird, the cormorant. Scart, to scratch, is a softer rendering of the harsher English word; and scart, a cormorant, is a corruption of the Gaelic sgarbh, which has the same meaning.

They that boud wi' cats may count upon scarts.—ALLAN RAMSAY.

"To scart the buttons," or draw one's hand down the breast of another, so as to touch the buttons with one's nail, is a mode of challenging to battle among Scottish boys.—JAMIESON.

Like scarts upon the wing by the hope of plunder led.

—Legends of the Isles.

D'ye think ye'll help them wi' skirlin' that gate, like an auld skart before a flaw
o' weather?—SCOTT: The Antiquary.

Scaur, a steep rock, a cliff on the shore; skerrie, a rock in the sea. Scarborough, a watering-place in England, signifies the town on the cliff or rock; Skerrievore, or the great rock or skerrie, from sgair and mhor, is the name of the famous lighthouse on the West Coast of Scotland. The skerries are rocks in the sea among the Scilly islands. Both scaur and skerrie are traceable to the Gaelic sgair, a rock in the sea, and sgor, a steep mountain side; whence also the English scar in Scarborough.

Ye that sail the stormy seas
Of the distant Hebrides.

By lordly Mull and Ulva's shore
Beware the witch of Skerrievore.

—Legends of the Isles.

Where'er ye come by creek or scaur,
Ye bring bright beauty.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Schacklock. Jamieson imagines this word to mean a pickpocket or burglar, or one who shakes or loosens locks. It is, however, a term of contempt for a lazy ne'er-do-weel, like the similar English word, shackaback, and is derivable from the Gaelic seac (shack), useless, withered, dried up, and leug, dull, sluggish, or incorrigibly lazy.

Schore, a man of high rank; schore-chieftain, a supreme chief. Jamieson derives schore from the German schor or schoren, "altus eminens"—a word which is not to be found in any German dictionary, nor in Dutch or Flemish, or any other Teutonic speech. The etymology is unknown or difficult to discover, unless it be presumed that the word was used metaphorically for high, in the sense of an eminence; from the Gaelic sgor, a steep rock, a cliff.

Schrew (sometimes written schrow), to curse; allied to the English shrew, a scolding and ill-tempered woman, and usually derived from the German beschreien, to curse. A screw, in English slang, signifies a mean, niggardly person, who, in American parlance, would be called "a mean cuss," or curse. A miserable old horse is called a screw, not as the Slang Dictionary says, "from the screw-like manner in which his ribs generally show through the skin," but from the original sense of shrew, to curse—i.e., a horse only fit to swear at—or possibly from the Gaelic sgruit, old, wrinkled, thin, meagre. Schreuit signifies accursed, also poisonous, which is doubtless the origin of the slang English screwed, intoxicated. The kindred English word scrub, a mean person, and scrubbed, vile, worthless, shabby, as used by Shakspeare in the phrase, "a little scrubbed boy," is evidently derived from the Gaelic sgrub, to act in a mean manner, and sgrubair, a churl, a niggard, or a despicable person. The true derivation of the Scottish schrew remains obscure.

In its form of shrew or schrow the word was formerly used in reference to the male sex, in the sense of a disagreeable and quarrelsome person; as in shrewd, an epithet applied to a man of penetration and sharp common sense. These words, whether schrew or schrow be the correct form, have given rise to many discussions among etymologists, which are not yet ended. Shrew or schrow has been derived not only from the Teutonic schreien, to shriek, to call out lustily, but from the little harmless animal called the shrew mouse, which was fabled to run over the backs of cattle and do them injury by the supposed venom of its bite. Some of these apparently incongruous or contradictory derivations are resolvable by the Gaelic sgruith (sru), to run, to flow. A shrew is a scold, a woman whose tongue runs too rapidly, or a man, if he have the same disagreeable characteristic; shrewd is an epithet applied to one whose ideas run clearly and precisely. The shrew mouse is the running mouse.

Sclaurie, to bespatter with mud; also metaphorically, to abuse, revile, to asperse, make accusation against, on the principle of the English saying, "Throw mud enough; some of it will stick." The lowland Scotch claur, or glaur, signifies mud, q.v. This word is derived from the Gaelic clabar (aspirated clabhar or claur), filth, mire, mud; "A gowpen o' glaur," or claur, the two hands conjoined, filled with mud. When the initial s was either omitted from or joined to the root-word, is not discoverable.

Scogie or scogie-lass, a kitchen drudge, a maid-of-all-work, a "slavey;" one unskilled in all but the commonest and coarsest work. From the Gaelic sgog, a fool, a dolt, one who knows nothing.

Scoil, shriek; akin to the English squel.

An' smellin' John he gaed a scoil,
Then plunged and gart the water boil.
—John o' Arnha'.

Till echo for ten miles around
Did to the horrid scoil resound.
—Ibid.

Scold or skald. Fingal and the other warriors whose deeds are commemorated by Ossian, drank out of shells (scallop shells), doubtless the first natural objects that in the earliest ages were employed for the purpose. Scold is an obsolete word, signifying to drink a health, evidently derived from shell, or scallop; the Teutonic schale, a shell or a cup; the Danish skjall, the French escaille or ecaille, the Flemish and Dutch schelp and schaal, the Norse skul, the Greek chalys, the Latin calix, a shell or cup. Possibly the tradition that the Scandinavian warriors drank their wine or mead out of the skulls of their enemies whom they had slain in battle, arose from a modern misconception of the meaning of skul — originally synonymous with the skull or cranium, or shell of the brain. Skul is used by the old Scottish poet, Douglas, for a goblet or large bowl.

To scold or scoll, to drink healths, to drink as a toast; scolder, a drinker of healths; skul, a salutation of one who is present, or of the respect paid to an absent person, by expressing a wish for his health when one is about to drink it.

—JAMIESON.

Skoolach (sgoolach), the name of one of Fingal's drinking cups.—MACLEOD AND DEWAR: Gaelic Dictionary.

The custom of drinking out of shells is of great antiquity, and was very common among the ancient Gael. Hence the expression so often met with in the Fingalian poets, "the hall of shells," "the chief of shells," "the shell and the song." The scallop shell is still used in drinking strong liquors at the tables of those gentlemen who are desirous to preserve the usages of their ancestors.—ARMSTRONG'S Gaelic Dictionary, 1828.

Scon or scone, a barley cake; from the Gaelic sgonn, a lump or mass.

Leeze me on thee, John Barleycorn,
Thou King o' grain,
On thee auld Scotland chaws her cood,
In souple scones, the wale o' food.
—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Sconifice, discomfit, beaten, led astray, subdued; from the Gaelic sgon, bad, and fios, knowledge.

I'm unco wae for the puir lady; I'm feart she'll grow wud gin she be lang in yon hole, for it would sconifice a horse, forbye a body.—MACLEAY'S Memoirs of the Clan MacGregor.

Scoot, a tramp, a gad-about, a vagrant, a term of opprobrium given to a low woman; from the Gaelic sguit, to wander. The English scout, a person employed by an army to reconnoitre, by travelling or wandering to and fro, so as to observe the motions of the enemy, is obviously from the same root.

Scottis bed. "This phrase," says Jamieson, "occurs in an Aberdeen Register, but it is not easy to affix any determinate meaning to it." May it not mean a ship's bed, or a hammock; from scothach, a small skiff?

Scouk, to sneak, to loiter idly or furtively; either a corruption of the English skulk, or a derivation with an allied meaning; from the Gaelic sguga, a coarse, ill-mannered, ungainly person.

They grin, they glower, they scouk, they gape.

—Jacobite Relics.

Scouth or skouth, elbow-room, space, scope, room for the arm in wielding a weapon so as to cut off an enemy or an obstruction at a blow; from the Gaelic sgud, to lop, to cut off; sgudadh, act of cutting down by a sudden blow.

An' he get scouth to wield his tree,
I fear you'll both be paid.

—Ballad of Robin Hood.

By break of day he seeks the dowie glen,

That he may scouth to a' his morning
len' (lend).

—ALLAN RAMSAY: Pastoral on the Death of Matthew Prior.

They tak religion in their mouth,
They talk o' mercy, grace, and truth—

For what? to gie their malice scouth
On some poor wight,
An' hunt him down, o'er right and ruth,
To ruin straight.

—BURNS: To the Rev. John M'Math.

"Scouth and routh" is a proverbial phrase for elbow-room and abundance.

That's a good gang for your horse, he'll have scouth and routh.—JAMIESON.

Scowf, a blustering, low scoundrel. Dutch and Flemish schoft. Explained in Dutch and French dictionaries as "maroufle, coquin, maraud," i.e., a low scoundrel, a rogue, an impudent blackguard.

He's naething but a scowf; Danish scuffer, to gull, to cheat, to shuffle; a cheat, a false pretender.—JAMIESON.

Scran or skran, odds and ends or scraps of eatables, broken victuals; also applied derisively to food or daily bread.

Scranning is a phrase used by school-boys when they spend their pocket-money at the pastry-cook's.—JAMIESON.

Scran-pock, a beggar's wallet to hold scraps of food. The word seran is derived from the Gaelic sgraith (pronounced sgra), to peel, to pare, to take off the rind or skin, and sgraithan (sgra-an), a little peeling or paring. In the sense of food, the word occurs in the Irish objurgation, "Bad seran to ye!"

Screed, a lengthy discourse or written article. This word is defined in a note to a passage in the "Noctes Ambrosianæ" as a "liberal allowance of anything."

A man, condemned to death for rape and murder at Inverness, requested that the editor of the Courier might be permitted to see him the night before his execution. After some talk, the criminal said, "Oh, Mr. Carruthers, what a scried you'll be printin' in your next paper about me!"—M.

Screik (or scaigh) o' day, the early dawn, the first flush of the morning light. Jamieson says the radical word is creek; from the Teutonic krieche, "aurora rutilans." It has been suggested that screich, or shriek, of day, means the shrill cry of the cock at early morn, but it is more probable that the phrase is from the Flemish krieken van den dag, which the French translate l'aube du jour, l'aurore, the dawn of day.

Scrieve, to roll or move or glide easily; from the Gaelic sgriob, to scrape, to draw a line or a furrow, to go on an excursion or journey.

The wheels o' life gae down-hill scrievin'.
—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Scrimp, bare, scarce; scrimply, barely, scarcely.

Down flowed her robe, a tartan sheen,
Till half a leg was scrimply seen.
And such a leg! my bonnie Jean Alone could peer it.

—BURNS: The Vision.

Scrog, a stunted bush, furze; scroggy, abounding in under-wood, covered with stunted bushes or furze like the Scottish mountains; from the Gaelic sgrogag, stunted timber or under-wood.

The way toward the cite was stony, thorny, and scroggy.—Gesta Romanorum.

As I came down by Merriemass,
And down among the scroggs,
The bonniest chield that e'er I saw Lay sleeping 'mang his dogs.

—Johnnie of Bredisles.

Sir Walter Scott, when in his last illness in Italy, was taken to a wild scene on the mountains that border the Lago di Garda. He had long been apathetic, and almost insensible, to surrounding objects; but his fading eyes flashed with unwonted fire at the sight of the furze bushes and scrogs that reminded him of home and Scotland, and he suddenly exclaimed, in the words of the Jacobite ballad—

Up the scroggy mountain,
And down the scroggy glen,
We dare na gang a hunting,
For Charlie and his men.

Scroggam and ruffam. These two words occur as a kind of chorus in a song attributed, but on doubtful authority, to Robert Burns. It is wholly unworthy of his genius, and appears—if he had anything at all to do with it—to have been slightly mended, to make it more presentable in decent company. Burns was almost wholly unacquainted with Gaelic, though he occasionally borrowed a phrase or a word from that language without quite comprehending its meaning.

There was a wife wonn'd in Cockpen, Scroggam!

She brewed guid ale for gentlemen,
Sing, Auld Coul lay ye down by me,
Scroggam, my dearie, ruffam.

Scroggam is the Gaelic for sgroggam, let me put on my bonnet; and ruffam is rubham, or (ruffam) let me rub or scratch. An obscene meaning is concealed in the words.

Scrub, a term of contempt for a mean, niggardly person; a Scottish word that has made good its place in the English vernacular. Scroppit, sordid, parsimonious; from the Gaelic scrub, to hesitate, to delay, especially in giving or paying; sgrubail, niggardly; scrubair, a churl, a miser.

Scrunt, a worn-out broom; scruntly, a Northern word, signifying, according to Halliwell, short, stunted. Jamieson gives a second interpretation—"a person of slender make, a walking skeleton." Possibly the word is a corruption of the English shrink, shrank. There is no trace of it either in the Teutonic or the Gaelic.

Scuddy, stark naked; from the Gaelic sguad, to strip or lay bare.

Strip a country lass o' laigh degree perfectly scuddy, and set her beside a town belle o' a noble blood, equally naked, and wha can tell the ewe-milker frae the duchess?—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Scug or skug, to hide, to take shelter, to run to sanctuary, to overshadow.

That's the penance he maun dree
To scug his deadly sin.

—Border Minstrelsy: Young Benjie.

In this quotation, skug seems to mean expiate, rather than hide or take refuge from the consequence of the deadly sin. Jamieson derives this word from the Gothic-Swedish skugga, a shade. It does not, however, appear in modern Swedish dictionaries. Skug and scuggery are noted both by Halliwell and Wright as northern English words for secret, hidden, and secrecy. In a note to the ballad of "Young Benjie," in the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," Sir Walter Scott states that scug means to shelter or expiate. Possibly, if the interpretation of "shelter" can be accepted as connected, the etymology of the word is the Gaelic sgathach, pronounced sgach, or skug, a screen.

Scunner or sconner, a very expressive word, significant of a loathing or aversion to a thing or person, for which it is sometimes difficult or impossible to account.

And yill and whisky gie to cairds
Until they scunner.

—BURNS: To James Smith.

From the Gaelic sgonn, bad, also rude, boorish, ill-mannered. It enters also into the composite of the English word scoundrel, and the Italian scondrucci, evidently of Celtic and Tuscan origin. Or it may perhaps be derived with equal propriety from sgeun, a fright, and sgeun-aich, to frighten.

Scutch, to bruise or beat, to beat or dress flax. The error of Shakspeare's printers in spelling scutch as scotch, has led to the all but incorrigible mispronunciation of the word—"We have scotched the snake, not killed it"—and to the idea that the word has something to do with Scotland, and with the habits of the Scottish people. Squids, pronounced scutch or scutch, is the Gaelic for to bruise, to beat; sguidseadh, the act of dressing flax. The word scutch is still used in the northern counties of England.

Sea-maw, the sea-gull, or sea-mew; the beautiful white bird of the ocean.

Keep your ain fish-guts to feed your ain sea-maw.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The white sea-mew, and not the white dove, was considered by the Druids the bird that Noah let fly from the ark on the subsiding of the Deluge. The name of pigeon, sometimes given to the dove, signifies in Gaelic the bird of security; from pighe, bird, and dion (di pronounced ji), security, protection. The coincidence is curious.

Seile, happiness; from the German selig, happy.

Seile o' your face! is a phrase in Aberdeenshire, expressive of a blessing on the person to whom it is addressed.—DEAN RAMSAY.

Sekand seil is best—the happiness that is earned is best—i.e., earned by the plough; from sock, the ploughshare, and here used metaphorically for labour of any kind.—FERGUSON'S Scots Proverbs.

Selkouth or selcouth, seldom seen or known; rendered "wondrous" by Sir Walter Scott, in the notes to "Thomas the Rhymer." The word is of the same origin as the English uncouth, strange, or unknown; from kythe, to show, or appear.

By Leader's side
A selkouth sight they see,
A hart and hind pace side by side
As white as snow.

—Thomas the Rhymer.

Sell or selle, a seat, a chair, a stool. Latin sedile, French selle, a saddle, the seat of a rider. This was once an English as well as a Scottish word, though obsolescent in the Elizabethan era. Shakspeare uses it in Macbeth—

Vaulting ambition that o'erleaps itself,
And falls on the other—

which, to render the image perfect, as Shakspeare meant—and no doubt wrote—ought to be read—

Vaulting ambition that o'erleaps its sell,
And falls on the other side.

The London compositors of Shakspeare's time, ignorant of the word sell, insisted upon making self of it, and in omitting "side." Ambition, in the guise of a horseman, vaulting to the horse's back, could not fall on the other side of itself; though it might well fall on the other side of the sell or saddle, and light upon the ground, which is the true Shakspearian metaphor.

Shacklebane, the wrist; a word apparently first applied to a prisoner who was handcuffed, or manacled.

Shadow-half, the northern exposure of land. Sir Walter Scott built Abbotsford on the wrong side of the Tweed—in the shadow-half. Land with a southern exposure is called the sunny-half, or the sunnyside.

Shaghle, sometimes written shaucle, to walk clumsily, to shuffle along, to drag or shackle the feet as if they were painfully constrained by the shoes; to distort from the original shape, to wear out.

Had ye sic a shoe on ilka foot, it wad gar ye shaghle.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

And how her new shoon fit her auld shackl't feet.

—BURNS: Last May a Braw Wooer.

Schachled is metaphorically applied to a young woman who has been deserted by her lover. She is, on this account, compared to a pair of shoes that have been thrown aside, as being so put out of shape as to be unfit to be worn any longer.

—JAMIESON.

Jamieson derives this word from the Icelandic skaga, deflectere; skaggrer, obliquus. If he had looked at the Gaelic, he would have found seac (shak), dried up, worn out, without substance, decayed.

Shairnie-faced, a contemptuous epithet applied to a person with a very dirty face; from sharn, or shairn, dung, more especially cow-dung, sometimes called in English cow-sherd, a word, in all probability, from the same source.

Flae luggit, shairnie-faced.

—The Blithesome Bridal.

Shalk, a servant, a workman, a farm-servant; from the Gaelic sgalag, corrupted in America into scalawag, and used as a term of opprobrium. The word enters into the components of the French marechal, and the English marshal; from the Gaelic maor, a bailiff, overseer, steward, or superintendent; and sgalag, a servant or workman, whence marechal, one in charge of workmen or servants.

Shang, a vulgar term for a hasty luncheon or "snack," and for what Scottish children call a "piece;" shangie, thin, meagre, lean.

A shang o' bread and cheese, a bite between meals. In Icelandic skan, a crust, a rind.—JAMIESON.

The root is probably the Gaelic seang (sheang), lean, hungry; thence, by extension of meaning, a piece taken to satisfy hunger.

Shangie-mou'd, hare-lipped, or with a cleft mouth; from shan-gan, a cleft stick, or anything cleft or divided.

Shangie-mou'd, haluket Meg.

—The Blithesome Bridal.

The word haluket in this derisory line appears to be a form of halse, a giddy, thoughtless girl.

Shank, the leg. This noun is sometimes used as a verb in Scotland, and signifies to depart, to send away, to dismiss. To shank a person is to send him away; equivalent in English, to give him the sack; to shank one's self away is to leave without ceremony. The English phrase, to go on shank's or shank's mare, i.e., to walk, is rendered in Scottish—to go on shank's naigie, or little nag. Jamieson absurdly suggests that the English, to travel by the marrow-bone stage, i.e., to walk, or go on shank's mare, may be derived from the parish of Marylebone, in London. The etymology of shank is the Gaelic seang (shank), lean, slender, like the tibia, or bone of the leg.

Shannach, or shannagh, a word explained by Jamieson in the phrase, "'It's ill shannagh in you to do this or that,' i.e., it is ill on your part, or it is ungracious in you to do so." In Gaelic seanacach signifies wily, cunning, sagacious, which is clearly the root of shannagh, so that the phrase cited by Jamieson signifies it is not wise, or it is ill wisdom on your part to do so.

Shard (more properly sharg), a contemptuous epithet applied to a little, weazened, undergrown, and, at the same time, petulant and mischievous child. From the Gaelic searg (s pronounced as sh), a withered, insignificant person or animal, one shrivelled or dried up with age, sickness, or infirmity; seargta, withered, dried up, blasted.

Shargar, sharg, a lean, scraggy, cadaverous person. Shargie, thin, shrivelled, dried up; from the Gaelic searg, a puny man or beast, one shrivelled with sickness or old age; also, to wither, to fade away, to dwindle or dry up, from want of vitality.

Sharrow, sharp, sour or bitter to the taste. Flemish scherp, French acerbe, Gaelic searbh, bitter; searbhad, bitterness; searbhag, a bitter draught.

Shathmont, a measure, of which the exact length is uncertain, but which is evidently small.

As I was walking all alane

Atween the water and the wa',

There I spied a wee, wee man,

The wee'est man that e'er I saw,

His leg was scarce a shathmont lang.

—Ballad of the Wee, Wee Man.

This obsolete English, as well as Scottish word, is sometimes written shaftmond, and shaftman. It appears in "Morte Arthur," and other early English poems. The etymology has never been satisfactorily traced. Shacht, which is also written schaft, is Flemish for the handle of a pike, or hilt of a sword; and mand is a basket or other piece of wickerwork; whence schacht-mand, a basket-hilt, or the length of a basket hilt of a sword, which may possibly be the origin of the word. The length of a shathmont is stated to be the distance between the outstretched thumb and little finger—a distance which corresponds with the position of the hand, when grasping the sword-hilt. Maund, for basket, is not yet entirely obsolete.

Shaver, a droll fellow, a wag, a funster, or one who indulges in attempts at fun; shavie, a trick.

Than him at Agincourt wha shone,
Few better were or braver,
And yet wi' funny, queer Sir John,
He was an unco shaver.
—BURNS: A Dream.

But Cupid shot a shaft
That played the dame a shavie.
—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

It has been suggested that shaver, in the sense of a wag or funster, is derived from Figaro the barber, as the type of a class who were professionally funny in amusing their customers, when under their hands for hair-cutting or hair-dressing. The words are possibly corruptions of the old English shaver, described by Nares as a low, cunning fellow, and used by the writers of the early decades of the seventeenth century. Shaver, in the United States, signifies a bill discounter who takes exorbitant interest, and a shave means a swindle or an imposition. Some have derived the word from shave, to cut the beard, itself a word of very uncertain etymology, and not necessarily connected with any idea of dishonesty. The more likely derivation is from the Gaelic saobh (or shaov), dissemble, prevaricate, take unfair advantage of, also, foolish.

Shaw, a small wood, a thicket, a plantation of trees; from the Teutonic. This word was once common in English literature. It still exists in the patronymics of many families, as Shawe, Aldershaw, Hinshaw, Hackshaw, Hawkshaw (or Oakshaw), and others, and is used by the peasantry in most parts of England and every part of Scotland.

Whither ridest thou under this green shawe?
Said this yeman.

—CHAUCER: The Frere's Tale.

Gaillard he was as goldfinch in the shaw,
Brown as a berry, a proper short fellow.
—Idem.: The Cok's Tale.

Close hid beneath the greenwood shaw.
—FAIRFAX.

In summer when the shaws be shene,
And leaves be fair and long,
It is full merry in fair forest,
To hear the fowles' song.

—Ballad of Robin Hood.

To all our haunts I will repair,
By greenwood, shaw, and fountain.
—ALLAN RAMSAY.

The braes ascend like lofty wa's,
The foaming stream deep roaring fa's,
O'erhung wi' fragrant spreading shaws,
The birks of Aberfeldy.

—BURNS.

Gloomy winter's now awa,
 Saft the westlin breezes blaw;
 'Mang the birks o' Stanley shaw,
 The mavis sings fu' cheery, oh.

—TANNAHILL.

There's nae a bonnie flower that springs
 By fountain, shaw, or green,
 There's nae a bonnie bird that sings,
 But minds me o' my Jean.

—BURNS: Of a' the Airts.

Shear. The primary meaning of shear is to cut or clip. In this sense it is used by English agriculturists, for the operation of cutting or clipping the fleece of sheep. In Scotland it is used in the sense of reaping or cutting the corn in harvest. On the occasion of the first visit of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort to the Highlands of Scotland, it was duly stated in the Court Circular that Her Majesty visited the shearers, and took much interest in their labours. In the following week, a newly-started pictorial journal, in opposition to the Illustrated London News, published a wood engraving, in which Her Majesty, the Prince, and several members of the Court in attendance, were represented as looking on at the sheep-shearing. The Cockney artist, ignorant alike of the seasons of agricultural operations and of the difference between the Scottish and English idioms, and who had no doubt, wished the public to believe that he was present on the occasion on which he employed his pencil, must have been painfully convinced, when his fraud was discovered, of the truth of the poetic adage, that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing;" and that shearing and reaping had different meanings in England and Scotland.

In hairst, at the shearing,
 Nae youths now are jeering,
 At fairs or at preaching,
 Nae wooing and fleeching.

—The Flowers o' the Forest.

Sheuch, a drain, a furrow or trench.

I saw the battle sair and teuch,
 And reekin' red ran mony a sheuch.

—BURNS: The Battle of Sheriffmuir.

Shiel or shielin, a hut, a shed, or small cottage on the moor or mountain for the shelter of cattle or sportsmen; derived by Jamieson from the Icelandic skala, a cottage; probably a corruption of shield, or shielding, a place where one may be shielded or sheltered from the weather. Wintershielins, winter quarters.

No; I shall ne'er repent, Duncan,
 And shanna e'er be sorry;

To be wi' thee in Hieland shiel

Is worth the lands o' Castlecary.

—Ballad of Lizzie Baillie.

The craik among the clover hay,
 The pairtick whirrin' o'er the lea,
 The swallow jinkin' round my shiel,
 Amuse me at my spinnin' wheel.

—BURNS: Bess and her Spinnin' Wheel.

Shill. Appears to be a contraction for the sake of euphony of the harsher English word shrill. The etymology of shrill is doubtful, though some derive it from the Scottish skirl, which they call an onomatopœia, or imitation of the sound. This also is doubtful, more especially if the Teutonic schreien, and the Dutch and Flemish schreuwen, to cry out discordantly, are taken into consideration.

The westlin' wind blows loud and skill,
The night's baith mirk and rainy, O.

—BURNS: My Nannie, O.

Shilpit, insipid, tasteless, dull, stale, flat; applied to liquor and sometimes to persons, metaphorically to signify that they are spiritless, timid, cowardly, and of no account.

A shilpett (shilpit) wretch, a heart stripped of manliness.—JAMIESON.

The Laird of Balmawhapple pronounced the claret shilpit, and demanded brandy with great vociferation.—SCOTT: Waverley.

According to Jamieson, shilpit is used to designate ears of corn that are not well filled. He derives it from the German schelp, signifying a reed, a bulrush, which is possibly the word that he referred to. But neither schelp, which Jamieson renders by the Latin putamen, a paring, a husk, a shell, or schilp, a bulrush, can be considered the root of shilpit, as applied to the insipidity or flatness of a liquor. The origin of shilpit remains unknown, though it may possibly have some remote connection with the Gaelic sile (shile), saliva, or drivel.

Shool, a shovel.

If honest nature made you fools,
What sairs your grammars?
Ye'd better ta'en up spades and shools
An' knappin' hammers.

—BURNS: To Lapraik.

Shoon, the old plural of shoe, still used in Scotland, though almost obsolete in England.

If ever thou gave hosen or shoon,
Every night an awle,
Sit thee down and pass them on,
And Christ receive thy saule.

—Funeral Dirge, in use in England before the Reformation, quoted in AUBREY'S Miscellanies.

Short, to divert, to amuse, to shorten the time by agreeable conversation; shortsome, diverting, as opposed to largsome, or longsome, tedious, wearisome. In English, short is often applied to a hasty or quick temper. In Scottish parlance, shortly or shortlie, signifies tartly, peevishly, ill-naturedly.

Shot, shote, a puny or imperfect young animal, especially a pig or lamb. The Americans, who have acquired many words from the Scottish and Irish immigrants, have shote, a weakly little pig, and apply the word metaphorically to man or woman as an epithet of contempt or derision. It is derived from the Gaelic seot (pronounced sheot, or shote), a stunted animal, a short tail, a tail that has been docked; and, generally, an incumbrance, impediment, or imperfection; scotair signifies an idle, lazy, useless person, a drone; a vaurien, a good-for-nothing.

Seth Slope was what we call down East a poor shote, his principal business being to pick up chips and feed the pigs.—BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.

Shouter, 'the shoulder; "Highlanders! shouter to shouter!" the motto of some of the Highland regiments in the British service.

When the cloud lays its cheek to the flood,
And the sea lays its shouter to the shore.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs: Hew Ainslie.

Shue, to play at see-saw; shuggie-shue, a swing.

Sib, related, of kin by blood or marriage. Hence the English gossip, from god-sib, related by baptismal union. From the German sippe, which has the same meaning; and sippenschaft, relationship.

He was sibbe to Arthur of Bretagne.

—CHAUCER.

He was no fairy born or sib to elves.

—SPENSER.

A boaster and a liar are right sib.

A' Stewarts are no sib to the king.

It's good to be sib to siller.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

We're no more sib than sieve and riddle,
Though both grew in the woods together.

—Cheshire Proverb.

Siccan, such; sic like, such like, or such a, as an adjective; sic like a time, such a time; sic like a fashion, in such a way or fashion; generally used in the sense of inopportune, improper, unseemly.

What the deil brings the laird here
At sic like a time?

—The Laird o' Cockpen.

Wi' siccan beauties spread around,
We feel we tread on holy ground.

—JAMES BALLANTINE; Darnick Tower.

Sicker, siccar, firm, safe, secure; sickerly, safely; sickerness, safety, security; to sicker, to make certain; lock sickar, lock securely, or safely—the motto of the ancient Scottish family, the Earls of Morton. Mak sickar is another motto of historic origin in Scotland.

Toddlin' down on Willie's mill,
Setting my staff wi' a' my skill
To keep me sicker.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Sick-saired, nauseated by repletion, served with food to excess, and to consequent sickness and loathing.

Simmer (or summer) couts, the gnats or midges which live for one summer day, born ere noon and dying ere sunset, and which seem to pass their brief life in whirling and dancing in the sunshine. The word, a summercout, is often applied affectionately to a very troublesome and merry young child. Jamieson suggests that couts may be a corruption of colts, in which supposition he is possibly correct, though the comparison of the tiny midge with so large an animal as a young horse is not easy to explain. According to Wright's Dictionary of Provincial English, cote signifies a swarm of bees, which seems to approach nearer to the idea of the midges. In Gaelic, cutha signifies frenzy, delirium; and cuthaich, frantic dancing of the midges or other ephemeral flies, allied in idea to the phrase of Shakspeare—"a midsummermadness." This may be the real origin of the phrase.

Sindle, seldom; from the Teutonic selten.

Kame sindle, kame sair.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Skalrag, of a shabby appearance; from the Gaelic sgail, to cover, and rag, which is both Gaelic and English. Skalrag is synonymous, as Jamieson states, with tatterdemalion, one covered with rags, though he is incorrect in the etymology from skail, to scatter, and the explanation that it signifies one who "gives his rags to the wind."

Skedaddle, to disperse suddenly.

A long obsolete Scottish word, revived unexpectedly in the army of the Potomac during the great American Civil War at the battle of Bull's Run, in 1862, when the Federal troops were seized with unreasonable panic, or alarm, and fled, when there was no pursuit. The word is said to be still occasionally used in Dumfriesshire, and to be applied to the wasteful overflow of the milk in the pails, when the milkmaids do not balance them properly, when carrying them from the byre to the farm. It has been generally considered to be an American coinage, on account of the incident of the retreat at Bull's Run, which brought it into notoriety, but was in reality employed either by the Gaelic-speaking Irish or Scottish soldiers under General MacClellan's command, and derived from the two Gaelic words sguit, to wander, to disperse, and allta, wild, irregular, ungovernable; or else from sgath (ska), to lop or cut off, and adhl, a hook; though some hold that it is derivable from the Greek σκεδαζω, to disperse. It is still doubtful which of these derivations, or either of them, is correct.

Skeigh, proud, scornful, disdainful, mettlesome, insolent in the pride of youth.

When thou and I were young and skeigh.

—BURNS: Auld Farmer to his Auld Mare, Maggie.

Maggie coost her head fu' heigh,
Looked asklent and unco skeigh.

—BURNS: Duncan Gray.

From the Gaelic sgheig, to taunt, deride, scorn; sgheigeach, disdainful. Jamieson has skeg, which he says is not clear, though he quotes "a skeg, a scorner, and a scolder"—words which might have helped him to the meaning.

Skeely, for skilful, but implying much more than the English word; sagacious, far-seeing.

Out and spak Lord John's mother,
And a skeely woman was she,
"Where met ye, my son, wi' that bonnie boy

That looks sae sad on thee?"

—Ballad of Burd Helen.

Where will I get a skeely skipper
To sail this ship o' mine?

—Ballad of Sir Patrick Spens.

Skeerie, easily scared or frightened, timid, shy; from scare.

Skellum and blellum. These words are directed against Tam o' Shanter by his wife, in Burns' immortal poem:

She tauld thee weel thou wast a skellum,
A bletherin', blusterin', drunken blellum.

They are explained in the glossaries as signifying the first, "a worthless fellow;" the second, "an idle, talkative fellow." Skellum was used by English writers in the seventeenth century, among others by Taylor, the water-poet, and by Pepys in his diary. It is traceable to the German, Dutch, and Flemish schelm, a rogue, a rascal, a bad fellow; and also to the Gaelic sgiolam, a coarse blackguard; and sgiolomach, addicted to slander and mischief-making. Blellum is also from the Gaelic, in which blialum signifies incoherent, confused in speech; especially applied to the utterances of a drunken man.

Skelp, to smack, to administer a blow with the palm of the hand; to skelp the doup (breech), as used to be the common fashion of Scottish mothers.

I'm sure sma' pleasure it can gie,

E'en to a deil,

To skelp and scaud puir dogs like me,
And hear us squeal!

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

This word, of which the English synonym is spank, to strike with the palm of the hand in a quick succession of blows, appears to be derived primarily from the Gaelic sgéalbh, to dash into small pieces, fragments, or splinters; and to have been applied afterwards, by extension of meaning, to the blows that might be sufficient to break any brittle substance. The English spank is to strike with the open hand, and the Scottish spunk, a match, signifies a splinter of wood, in which the same extension of meaning, from the blow to the possible results of the blow, is apparent. Skelp also means to walk or run at a smart pace, and the slang English phrase, "A pair of spanking tits" (a pair of fast-trotting or galloping horses), shows the same connection between the idea of blows and that of rapid motion.

And, barefit, skelp

Awa' wi' Willie Chalmers.

—BURNS.

Three hizzies, early at the road,

Cam skelpin' up the way.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Tam skelpit on thro' dub and mire,

Despising wind and rain and fire.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Skelpie-limmer, a violent woman, ready both with her hands and tongue.

Ye little skelpie-limmer's face,
I daur ye try sic sportin'.
—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Skene-occle, a dagger, dirk; from the Gaelic sgian, a knife, concealed in the achlais, under the arm, or in the sleeve; achlasan, anything carried under the arm; from whence the verb achlaisich, to cherish, to fold to the bosom, or encircle with the arm.

"Her ain sell," said Callum, "could wait for her a wee bit frae the toun, and kittle her quarters wi' his skene-occle."—"Skene-occle! what's that?" Callum unbuttoned his coat, raised his left arm, and, with an emphatic nod, pointed to the hilt of a small dirk, snugly deposited under the wing of his jacket.

—SCOTT: Waverley.

Skin, a vituperative term applied to a person whom it is wished to disparage or revile. "Ye're naething but a nasty skin." Jamieson suggests that this word is a figurative use of the English skin, as denoting a husk. It is more likely to be a corruption of the Gaelic sgonn, a block-head, a dolt, a rude clown, an uncultivated and boorish person, a dunce; from whence sgonn bhalaach, a stupid fellow; sgon signifies vile, worthless, bad; whence the English scoundrel—from sgon, and droll, or droil, an idle vagabond.

Skincheon o' drink, a drop of drink, a dram; a pouring out of liquor. Skincheon is a misprint for skinkin'.

Skink, to pour out; skinker, a waiter at a tavern who pours out the liquor for the guests, a bar tender. From the Flemish and German schenken, to pour out. This word is old English as well as Scotch, and was used by Shakspeare, Ben Jonson, and their contemporaries. Skink is sometimes contemptuously applied to soup or broth when not of the accustomed flavour or consistency, imparted by vegetable ingredients, such as barley, peas, &c.

Sweet Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under-skinker.

—SHAKSPEARE: Henry IV.

Such wine as Gannymede doth skink to Jove.—SHIRLEY.

Ye powers wha mak mankind your care,
And dish them out their bill o' fare;
Auld Scotland wants nae skinking ware.
That jaups i' luggies,
But if ye wish her grateful prayer,
Gie her a haggis.

—BURNS: To a Haggis.

The wine! there was hardly half a mutchkin,—and poor fushionless skink it was.—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

In many of the editions of Burns which have been printed in England, the compositors, or printers' readers, ignorant of the word skink, have perverted it in the "Lines to a Haggis," into stink.

Auld Scotland wants nae stinking wares.
—Complete Works of ROBERT BURNS, edited by Alexander Smith. London: Macmillan & Co., 1868.

"These editions," says Mr James M'Kie of Kilmarnock in his Bibliography of Robert Burns, "are known to collectors as the stinking editions."

Skipper, the captain of a ship, but properly any sailor; skip-man, a ship man. This word is fast becoming English, and promises to supersede captain as the designation of officers in the mercantile marine. Skipper is from the Danish skipper, the German, Dutch, and Flemish schiffer.

The king sat in Dunfermline tower,
Drinking the blood-red wine;
Oh whaur 'll I get a skeely skipper,
To sail this ship o' mine.

—SIR PATRICK SPENS.

It is related of the late eminent sculptor, Patric Park, that, on an excursion through the beautiful lakes that form the chain of the Caledonian Canal, he was annoyed by the rudeness of the captain of the steamer, and expressed his sense of it in language more forcible than polite. The captain, annoyed in his turn, inquired sharply—"Do you know, sir, that I'm the captain of the boat?" "Captain be hanged!" said the irate man of genius, "you're only the skipper, that is to say, you're nothing but the driver of an aquatic omnibus!" The skipper retired to hide his wrath, muttering as he went that the sculptor was only a stone mason!

Skirl, to shriek, to cry out, or to make a loud noise on a wind instrument.

Ye have given the sound thump, and he the loud skirl (i.e., you have punished the man, and he shows it by his roaring).

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

When skirlin' weanies see the light,
Thou mak's the gossips clatter bright.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

A family belonging to the Scottish Border, after spending some time at Florence, had returned home, and, proud of the progress they had made in music, the young ladies were anxious to show off their accomplishments before an old confidential servant of the family, and accordingly sang to her some of the finest songs which they had learned abroad. Instead, however, of paying them a compliment on their performance, she showed what she thought of it, by asking with much naivetté—"Eh, mem! Do they ca' skirling like yon, singing in foreign parts?"—DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

Skirl-naked, stark naked; naked as a child that skirls or squalls at the moment of its birth. Skirl is allied to screech, shriek, and shrill, and comes immediately from the Gaelic sgreuch, a shrill cry, and sgreuchail, shrieking.

Sklent, oblique, slanting; to deviate, to slant off the right line of truth, to cast obliquely; to push away, to look away, to squint.

Now, if yer ane o' world's folk,
Who rate the wearer by the cloak,
And sklent on poverty their joke,
Wi' bitter sneer.

—BURNS: To Mr. John Kennedy.

One dreary, windy, winter night,
The stars shot down wi' sklentint light.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

The city gent
Behind a kist to lie and sklent,
Or purse-proud, big with cent. per cent.
An' muckle wame.

—BURNS: Epistle to Lapraik.

Ye did present your smootie phiz
'Mang better folk,
And *sklent*ed on the man of Uz
Your spiteful joke.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Skrae, or scrae, a thin, skinny, meagre person, a skeleton; skrae-shankit, having skinny legs; English scrag, and scraggy; Gaelic sgraidh-teach (dh silent), shrivelled, dried up; sgraidht, a lean, shrivelled, ugly old woman.

But gin she say, lie still ye skrae,
That's Water Kelpie!

—JAMIESON'S Border Minstrelsy:
Water Kelpie.

In the glossary appended by Sir Walter Scott to Jamieson's ballad written in imitation of the antique, skrae is glossed as a skeleton.

Skreigh, or screigh, a shrill cry, a shriek, a screech.

The skreigh o' duty, which no man should hear and be inobedient.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

It's time enough to skreigh when ye're stricken.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

When thou and I were young and skeigh,
An' stable meals at fairs were dreigh,
How thou would prance and snort, and skreigh,

An' tak the road.

—BURNS: Auld Farmer to his Auld Mare, Maggie.

Skulduddery. This grotesque word has been held to signify indulgence in lust, or illicit passion; but it also signifies obscene language or conversation, or, as it is sometimes called in English, smut. Jamieson suggests the Teutonic shuld, fault or crime, as the origin of the first syllable, and the Gaelic sgaldruth, a fornicator, as the origin of the whole word. Scaldruth, however, has long been obsolete, and seems to have been a compound of sgald, to burn or scald; and druis, lust; whence the modern Gaelic druisear, a fornicator. If the Gaelic etymology be accepted, the word would resolve itself into a corruption of sgaldruis, burning lust, or burned by lust. From the Gaelic druis came the old English druery, for courtship, intercourse of the sexes, gallantry; and drossel, an unchaste woman. The French, who have inherited many Celtic words from their ancestors, the Gauls, formerly used the word dru for a lover (un ami), and drué for a sweetheart (une amie). Drû, as an adjective, signified, according to the "Dictionnaire de la Langue Romane" (Paris 1768), "un amant vigoureux et propre au plaisir." Druerie, in the sense of courtship and gallantry, occurs in the "Roman de la Rose." Another French word, sgaldrine, still more akin to the Scottish skulduddery, is cited in the "Dictionnaire Comique de Le-Roux," as a "terme d'injure pour une femme de mauvaise vie; femme publique affligée d'une maladie brulante."

And there will be Logan Macdonald—
Skulduddery and he will be there!

—BURNS: The Election.

That can find out naething but a wee bit skulduddery for the benefit of the Kirk
Treasury.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Skybald, apparently the same as the English skewbald and piebald, terms to designate a horse of two colours, marked as cows and oxen more usually are. Both skybald and piebald, as well as the English skewbald, have their origin in the Gaelic. Sky and skew are corruptions of sgìath, a shade, a dark shade; pie comes from pighe, a pie, or maggie, a bird whose black plumage is marked with a white streak; bald is derived from the Gaelic ball, a mark or spot; whence skybald is shade-marked, and piebald is marked like a bird. Jamieson says that, in Scotland, skybald signifies a base, mean fellow, a worthless person, and that it is also applied to a man in rags and tatters. Possibly this metaphorical use of the word arises from the fact that the rags of such a person are often of various colours. Locke, the celebrated English metaphysician, uses piebald in a similar sense, "a piebald livery of coarse patches." In Yorkshire, according to Wright's Provincial Dictionary, skye'd signifies parti-coloured, which is apparently from the same Gaelic root as sky and skew.

Skyre. Jamieson renders this word, pure, mere, utter. The Flemish and German schier signifies nearly, almost; while the Danish skier means clear, pure, limpid. Thus the Danish, and not the German or Flemish, seems to be the root of this Scottish word.

Skyte or skite, to eject liquid forcibly, a flux, or diarrhoea. This vulgar word is often, both in a physical and moral sense, applied in contempt to any mean person. A skyte of rain is a sudden and violent shower; skyter is a squirt, a syringe, so called from the violent ejection of the liquid. Bletherum skyte—more properly, blether and skyte (see BLETHER, ante)—is a colloquial phrase very often employed by people who are unaware of the grossness of its original meaning, and who are impressed by its aptness as descriptive of the windy trash of conversation and assertion which it but too powerfully designates. The word is derivable either from the English scud, fast motion, or the Gaelic sgud, to cut, a cutting wind.

When hailstones drive wi' bitter skyte.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

Slack, slug, a pass, opening, or gap between two hills; from the Gaelic sloc, and slochd, a hollow, a cavity, a ravine. Slochd muigh, or the gap of the wild swine, is a wild pass in the Grampians between Perth and Inverness.

But ere he won the Gate-hope slack,
I think the steed was wae and weary.

—Minstrelsy of the Border:
Annan Water.

Slanky, slimy.

Twa slanky stanes seemed his spule banes.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Water
Kelpie.

Slap, a breach, or casual opening in a hedge or fence.

At slaps the billies [fellows] halt a blink [a little while],
Till lassies strip their shoon.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Slawpie, slaipie, indolent, slovenly; derived by Jamieson from the Icelandic slapr, homuncio sordidus. It is rather from the Gaelic slapach, slovenly, slapair and slaopair, a slovenly man, a drawler, an idler; and slapag, a slut, a lazy, dirty, slovenly woman or girl; and slapaireachd, slovenliness.

Sleuth-hound, a blood-hound, a hound trained to follow by the scent the track of man or beast. From the Gaelic slaod, a trace, a trail; and slot, sliogach, subtle, keen scented.

Wi' his sleuth-dog in his watch right sure;
Should his dog gie a bark,
He'll be out in his sark,
And die or win.

—Ballad of The Fray of Suport.

Slid, smooth; sliddery, slippery.

Ye had sae saft a voice, and a slid tongue.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Gentle Shepherd.

Sliddery, slippery; from slide. Slidder, unstable, changeable in thought or purpose, not to be depended upon.

There's a sliddery stane afore the ha' door.

[It is sometimes dangerous to visit great houses.]

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Though I to foreign lands must hie,
Pursuin' fortune's sliddery ba'.

—BURNS: Farewell to his Native Country.

Slink, a tall, idle person; a term of depreciation. The word is usually associated with lang, as, a lang slink. It is sometimes written and pronounced slunk. It is derived apparently from the Teutonic schlang, the Dutch and Flemish slang, a snake. Slinken means to grow long, thin, and attenuated; and Jamieson has the adjective slunk, lank and slender; and the substantive slink, a starveling.

Slint or slinter, a slovenly, untidy, awkward man, corresponding with the English slut as applied to a woman; from the Gaelic slaod, to draggle or trail lazily along the ground; slaodag, a slut; slaodair, a sluggard. Jamieson derives it from the Teutonic slodde, a dirty female; but the word is not to be found in German dictionaries, though it possibly exists in the vulgar patois.

Sliver, a slice, a small piece. The word was employed in this sense by Chaucer, and is akin to the English slice, and to the Gaelic slios, a side. Stormonth derives it from the Anglo-Saxon slifan, to cleave or split. Shakspeare uses the word three times.

Slivered in the moon's eclipse.

—Macbeth, act iv. scene 1.

An envious sliver broke.

—Hamlet, act iv. scene 7.

Sliver and disbranch.

—Lear, act iv. scene 2.

Slocken, to slake, to allay thirst, to extinguish.

Foul water may slocken fire.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

It slockened not my drouth, but aggravated a thousandfold the torrent o' my greed.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

The Rev. John Heugh of Stirling was one day admonishing one of his people on the sin of intemperance: "Man! John! you should never drink except when you're dry." "Weel, sir," said John, "that's what I'm aye doin', but I'm never slocken'd."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Slogan, the war-cry of a Highland clan.

Our slogan is their lyke-wake dirge.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

When the streets of high Dunedin,
Saw lances gleam and falchions redden,
And heard the slogan's deadly yell.

SCOTT: Lay of the Last Minstrel.

Jamieson has this word as slughorn, and derives it from the Irish Gaelic sluagh, an army, and arm, a horn. Jamieson might have found the true etymology in the Scottish Gaelic sluagh, the people, the multitude, the clan; and gairm, a cry, a shout, a loud call. The slogan was not made on a horn; and arm does not signify a horn in Gaelic. Slogan, the war-cry, has been used by English writers as synonymous with pibroch, especially in a play that enjoyed considerable popularity a quarter of a century ago, on the siege and relief of Lucknow during the Indian Mutiny. When General Havelock approaches with his gallant Highlanders, Jeanie, the heroine of the piece, who hears the music of the pibroch from afar, exclaims, "Oh! hear ye not the slogan?" But the "pock puddings," as one of Sir Walter Scott's characters called the English, knew no better, and always applauded the slogan.

Slogger, to swallow broth, porridge, or spoon meat awkwardly and voraciously; from the Gaelic sluig, to swallow; slugair, or slogair, a glutton. Synonymous with the local English slorp.

Sloom, a deep sleep, whence the English word slumber, a light sleep; from the Flemish sluimeren, to sleep; sluimerig, sleepy.

Sloomy, lethargic.

Slorp, slotter, to eat or drink greedily, and with a guttural and vulgar noise; from the Flemish and Dutch slorpen, which has the same meaning.

There's gentle John, and Jock the slorp,
And curly Jock, and burly Jock,
And lying Jock himself.

—HOGG'S Jacobite Relics.

Slort, a sloven; slotter, to work in an idle, slovenly, and bungling manner; akin to the English slut, applied in the same manner to a woman. From the Gaelic slaodair, a sluggard; a lazy, careless person.

Slounge, to go idling about, to go sorning (q.v.), or seeking for a dinner, lounging about and coming into the house of a friend or acquaintance at or near dinner time, as if accidentally. Apparently a corruption of the Gaelic slugair, a glutton; sluganach, a voracious person, and slugan, the gullet.

Slunk, sometimes written slung, an Aberdonian word, which according to Jamieson signifies a tall, cadaverous-looking person of inferior intellect, "a lang, toom, haiverilly kind o' chiel." He derives it from the Icelandic slani, an imbecile. The word, however, seems akin to the English slink, as its past participle slunk, and to be derivable from the German schlang, a snake that slinks away, and is hence, by association of ideas, applied metaphorically, in the same way as the English sneak, which has a similar origin.

Sma' drink, a weak liquor; the English say small beer, for weak beer or ale, and the French petit vin, for inferior wine. To "think nae sma' drink o' himsel'," is a phrase applied to any one who thinks too much of his own dignity or importance.

Smaik, a mean, low fellow, a poltroon, a puny fellow, a person of small moral or physical account.

"Oh, I have heard of that smaik," said the Scotch merchant; "it's he whom your principal, like an obstinate auld fule, wad mak a merchant o'—wad he, or wad he no!"—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

This false, traitorous smaik. I doubt he is a hawk of the same nest.—SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel.

From the Teutonic schmach, insult, ignominy; schmächtig, slender, lank.

Smeddum, spirit, pith, energy. Also dust, powder; from the Gaelic smodan, small dust.

Now and then ye may overhail an article that's ower lang and ower stupid, and put some smeddum into it.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Oh, for some rank mercurial roset,
Or pale red smeddum,
I'd gie ye sic a hearty dose o't
Wad dress your droddum.*

—BURNS: To a Louse.

Smeerless, pithless, marrowless; from the Gaelic smior, marrow.

I mark him for a smeerless dolt,
Who'd jink to eschew a thunderbolt.
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Smergh, marrow, vigour, pith; strength either of body or of mind; smerghlers, weak, marrowless, pithless, vapid, insipid; from the Gaelic smior, marrow, and smiorach, marrowy, or full of marrow and pith. The Teutonic mark, marrow, seems to be of this origin, with the omission of the initial s, though Jamieson traces it to the Teutonic mergh, which does not mean marrow, but marl.

Smervy, fat and marrowy.

They scum'd the cauldron, fed the fuel,
They steer'd and preed, the smervy gruel.
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

* Droddum, a ludicrous word for the posterior of a child.

Smiddle, to work by stealth; derivation uncertain, but possibly related to smith, smithy, and smiddy.

Smird, to gibe, to jeer. Jamieson derives this word from the Icelandic sma' (the Scottish sma' and the English small), and ord, a word, and supposes it to mean small and contemptuous language. It is more probably from the Gaelic smioradh or smiuradh, smearing, or besmearing; used metaphorically for larding with abuse or ill-natured jests.

Smirl, a roguish or mischievous trick. Jamieson derives this word from the German schmieren, illudere; but in the German dictionaries it is defined as "to smear." It is more probably from the Gaelic smiorail, strong, active, lively; and "I'll play him a smirl for that yet," as quoted by Jamieson, simply means, "I'll play him a lively trick for that yet."

And in some distant place,
Plays the same smirle.

—T. SCOTT.

Smirtle, a slight, or half-suppressed laugh or smile.

And Norie takes a glack of bread and cheese,
And wi' a smirtle unto Lindie goes.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

This word is akin to the English smirk, but without any depreciatory meaning.

Smit, the noise, clash, or clank of smitten metal; from the English smite.

As she was walking maid alane
Down by yon shady wood,
She heard a smit o' bridle reins
She wished might be for good.
—Border Minstrelsy: Lord William.

Smitch or smytch, a term of contempt or anger applied to an impudent boy; from smut, dirt, a stain, an impurity. German schmützig, dirty; Flemish and Dutch smotsen, to soil, to dirty, to defile; the English smudge.

Smolt, an epithet applied to the weather when fair and calm, with a blue sky.

Merry maidens, think na lang,
The weather is fair and smolt.
—Christ's Kirk on the Green.

This word is used, according to Messrs. Halliwell and Wright, in Sussex and other parts of England. It is probable that the root is the Teutonic schmalte, deep blue, applied to the unclouded sky.

O'er Branxholme Tower, ere the morning
hour,
Where the lift is like lead so blue,
The smoke shall roll white on the weary night,
And the flame shine dimly through.
—Border Minstrelsy: Lord Inglist.

Smook, to prowl stealthily about a place, with a view to pilfer small articles; from the Flemish smuig, furtive, secret.

Smookie, addicted to petty larceny.

The smookie gipsy i' the loan.
—ROSS'S Helenore.

Smoor, abbreviation and corruption of smother.

What's the matter, quo' Willie,
Though we be scant o' claes,
We'll creep the closer thegither,
An' we'll smoor a' the fleas.
—WOOD AN' MARRIED AN' A'.

Smyte, a small particle; possibly derived from the spark of an anvil when smitten; smytrie, a large collection of little things, or little children.

A smytrie o' wee daddie weans.
—BURNS.

Snack, a slight repast, a cut from the loaf, refreshment taken hastily between meals; to go snacks, to share with another. From the Gaelic snaigh, to cut. Snack, and to go snacks, are still used in colloquial English, and are derived by Worcester and others from snatch, i.e., as much of a thing as can be snatched hastily. An etymology which may apply to snack, a lunch, but scarcely applies so well as the Gaelic snaigh, to the phrase of go snacks, or shares in any thing.

Snag, to chide, to taunt, to reprove, to snarl; snaggy, sarcastical, apt to take offence. This word, with the elision of the initial s, remains in English as nag, the form of scolding or grumbling, which is peculiarily attributed to quarrelsome women. It is one of the numerous family of words commencing with sn, which, in the Scottish and English languages, generally imply a movement of the lips and nose, expressive of anger, reproof, scorn, and in inferior animals, of an inclination to bite; such as snarl, snub, sneer, snort, snap, snack, or snatch (as an animal with its jaws), and many others, all of which, inclusive of snore, sniff, snuff, sneeze, snigger, snivel, snout, have a reference to the nose. They appear to be derivable primarily from the Gaelic sròn, pronounced strone, the nose. The Teutonic languages have many words commencing with schn, which also relate to the action of the nose, and are possibly of the same Celtic origin.

Snaggerel, a contemptuous term for a puny, deformed child; from snag, a broken bough.

Snash, impertinence, rebuff, rebuke.

Poor bodies . . .
. . . thole (endure) a factor's snash.
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Sneck or snick, the latch, bolt, or fastening of a door. The etymology is uncertain, and cannot be traced to any branches of the Teutonic, either High Dutch, Low Dutch, or Danish and Swedish. The English has snacket and snecket, a fastening, a hasp; as well as sneck and snick, with the same meaning as the Scotch, but the words are local, not general.

And you, ye auld sneck-drawing dog,
Ye came to Paradise incog.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Sneeshin', snuff; from sneeze; sneeshin'-mull, a snuff-box.

Snaped haddocks, wilks, dulse an'
tangles,

An' a mull o' gude sneeshin' to prie;
When weary wi' eatin' and drinkin'

We'll up an' we'll dance till we die.

—The Blithesome Bride.

Snell, keen, bitter, sharp, quick; from the Flemish snell, and the German schnell, swift.

And bleak December's winds ensuing Baith snell and keen.

—BURNS: To a Mouse.

Sir Madoc was a handy man, and snell
In tournament, and eke in fight.

—Morte Arthur.

Shivering from cold, the season was so snell.

—DOUGLAS: Eneid.

The wipds blew snell.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Snelly the hail smote the skeleton trees.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Snirtle, to laugh slyly, or in a half suppressed manner.

He feigned to snirtle in his sleeve,
When thus the laird addressed her.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

Snood or snude, a ribbon, a band worn by young unmarried women in or around the hair.

To tyne one's snude is a phrase applied in Scotland to a young woman who has lost her virginity. It is singular that the ancient Romans had the same figure.—JAMIESON.

The word and the fashion appears to be peculiar to the Celtic nations. In Gaelic, snuadh signifies beauty and adornment, and thence an ornament, such as the snood of the Scottish maidens. The word appears in Snowdon, the ancient name of Stirling, which signifies the fair or beautiful hill. The Kymric and Welsh has ysnoden, a fillet, a lace, a band, evidently from the same root. The much despised English patronymic Snooks, sometimes alleged to be a corruption of sevenoaks, is probably of Celtic origin, from snudhach (snu-ach), beautiful.

Snool, to flatter abjectly, to cringe, to crawl. This word also means to snub, to chide ill-naturedly and unduly.

They snool me sair and haud me down,
And gar me look like bluntie, Tam;
But three short years will soon wheel roun',
And then comes ane and twenty, Tam.

—BURNS.

Is there a whim-inspired fool,
Ow're blate (shy) to seek, ow're proud to snool.

—BURNS: A Bard's Epitaph.

Your snools in love and cowards in war,
Frac maidens' love are banished far.

—John o' Arnha'.

The etymology of this word is uncertain. It seems to have some relation to the nose and mouth, and expression of the features in an unfavourable sense; like many words in the English language commencing with sn. (See SNAG, ante.) The most probable derivation is that given by Jamieson from the Danish snoſte, to reprimand unnecessarily, continually, and unjustly—the French rabrouer.

Snoove, to glide away easily, like a worm or snake; to sneak. Probably from the Gaelic sniomh (pronounced sni-ov), to twist, to twine, to wriggle,

But just thy step a wee thing hastit,
Then snoov't away.

—BURNS: Auld Farmer to his Auld Mare, Maggie.

Snowk, to snuff, to smell, to scent.

Wi' social nose they snuffed and snowket.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Snuit, to go about in a careless, half-stupefied manner; snuitit, having the appearance of sleepy inebriety.

He was gaun snuitin down the street;
he came snuitin in.—JAMIESON.

Jamieson traces the word to the Dutch and Flemish snuit, the snout. The Gaelic has snot, to smell, to snuff up the wind, to turn up the nose suspiciously; and snotuch, suspecting, inclined to suspicion.

Snurl, to ruffle the surface of the waters with a wind; metaphorically applied to the temper of man or woman.

Northern blasts the ocean snurl.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Sockdologer, a heavy, knock-down blow. This word is usually considered to be an Americanism. But it clearly comes from the "old country," from the Gaelic sogh, easy; and dolach, destructive; dolaidh, harm, detriment, injury, destruction; thus a sockdologer means a blow that destroys easily.

Sodger or sojer, a soldier; snead-die or sivad, a familiar and vulgar name for a soldier.

My humble knapsack a' my wealth,
A poor but honest sodger.

—BURNS.

The Scottish word sodger is possibly not a mere corruption or mispronunciation of the English soldier, or the French soldat, as it is generally considered to be. The old Teutonic for soldier was kriegsman, warman, or man of war; a word which was not adopted by the early English of German, Danish, and Flemish descent. The English soldiers were called bowmen, spearmen, archers, &c. The commonly accepted derivation of soldier is from solde, pay,—i.e., one who is paid. But in early times, before the establishment of standing armies, people who took up arms in defence of their country were not mercenaries, but patriots and volunteers, or retainers of great territorial chieftains. Sodger, as distinguished from soldier, dates from a period anterior to the invention of gunpowder and the use of fire-arms, when bows and arrows were the principal weapons of warfare over all Europe; may be derived from the Gaelic saighead, an arrow; and saighdear, an arrower, an archer, a bowman; the same as the Latin sagittarius. Thus the Scottish sodger appears to be a word of legitimate origin and of respectable antiquity. Soldier, from the French soldat, is comparatively modern, and does not appear in the "Dictionary of the First or Oldest Words in the English Language, from the Semi-Saxon Period from A.D. 1250 to 1300," by Herbert Coleridge, published in 1862. It is worthy of mention that Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary does not contain sodger or sojer, but has sodgerize, to act as a soldier, or go a soldiering; and the strange term sodgertheed, which he explains to be a low word meaning one that has little or no money, or having "the thigh of a soldier!" Had Jamieson, before hazarding this suggestion, looked to another page of his own dictionary, he would have found the word thig, to beg, and might have explained the phrase in the sense of a disbanded soldier, begging from door to door, without any particular reference to his thigh.

Sokand seil. An old Scottish proverb says, "Sokand seil is best." Dean Ramsay, who quotes it, defines it to mean, "The plough and happiness is the best lot." The translation is too loose to be accepted. Soc is, indisputably, a ploughshare, in Gaelic, in French, in Flemish (in Latin soccus), and other languages. No trace, however, has hitherto been discovered of its employment as a verb, signifying to plough. It would seem, nevertheless, from the terminal syllable in sokand, that it was in old time so used in Scotland. Seil is from the Gaelic sealbh, signifying good fortune, good luck, happiness,—whence the Teutonic selig, happy. Ploughing, in the proverb, may be taken to mean labouring generally; and then the proverb might be rendered, "Labouring happiness, or the happiness that results from labour, is the best."

Sonk, a stuffed seat, or a couch of straw; sonkie, a gross, coarse, unwieldy man, of no more shapely appearance than a sack of straw. The root of these two words seems to be the Gaelic sonnach, anything thick, bulky, or strong; sonn is a stout man, also a hero; and sonnach, a fat, ill-shaped person.

The Earl of Argyle is bound to ride,
And all his habergeons him beside,
Each man upon a sonk of strae.

—Introduction to Border Minstrelsy.

Sonse, happiness, good luck; sonsie, strong, happy, pleasant; from the Gaelic sona, happy, and sonas, happiness. Sonas agus donas, happiness and unhappiness.

His honest, sonsie, baws'nt face
Aye gat him friends in ilka place.

—Burns: The Two Dogs.

Sook, a suck, a drop, a sup or sip, a taste of liquor. Sooch or sook is defined by Jamieson as "a copious draught."

There sat a bottle in a hole,
Ayont the ingle low;
And aye she took the ither sook,
To drook the stoury tow.

—The Weary Fund o' Tow.

Sool (sometimes written soul), a sufficiency of food, also, a relish taken with insipid food to render it more palatable. "Sool to a potatoe," often applied to a finnan haddie, or a red herring; sometimes ludicrously used by the Irish as, "potatoes and point," a potato pointed at a red herring hanging from the roof, to whet the imagination with the unattainable flavour of the sool.

I have, sweet wench, a piece of cheese as good as tooth may chaw,
And bread and wildings souling well.

—WARNER: Albion's England.

Sool, anything eaten with bread, such as butter, cheese, &c.—WRIGHT'S Dictionary of Obsolete English.

Soul, French saouler, to satisfy with food. Soul, silver, the wages of a retainer, originally paid in food.—Idem.

The French have soul, full; and se souler, to get drunk, i.e., full either of meat or of liquor. The Gaelic sult seems to be of kindred derivation, and signifies fat, full, replenished with good things.

Sooth. Old English for truth, still preserved in such phrases as, "in sooth," "for-sooth," &c. In Scottish, sooth is used as an adjective, and signifies "true."

A sooth boord is nae boord (i.e., a jest with too much truth in it may be no jest at all).—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Sorn, to go to a person's house, without invitation, and fasten yourself upon him to feast or lodge. The English synonym is "to sponge upon;" a very inferior form of expression, partaking of the character of slang, and not to be compared for force and compactness to the Scottish word. Mr. John Thompson, private secretary to the Marquis of Hastings in India, in his "Etymons of English Words," defines sorn to be a corruption of sojourn. The true etymon appears to be the Gaelic saor, free, and saoranach, one who makes free or establishes himself in free quarters. It is related of a noble Scottish lady of the olden time, who lived in a remote part of the Highlands, and was noted for her profuse and cordial hospitality, that she was sometimes overburdened with habitual sorners. When any one of them out-stayed his welcome, she would take occasion to say to him at the morning meal, with an arch look at the rest of the company—"Mak' a guid breakfast, Mr. Blank, while ye're about it; I dinna ken whar' ye'll get your dinner." The hint was usually taken, and the sorner departed.

Soss, an incongruous, miscellaneous mixture of eatables.

Soss-poke, a ludicrous term for the stomach; usually derived from sal and salsum, because the ingredients are salted; but the word is more likely to have originated in soss, the old French sause, the Flemish sass, the modern sauce, compounded of several ingredients, all blending to produce a particularly piquant flavour. Soss is used in colloquial and vulgar English in the Scottish sense of a mixed mess; and sorzle, evidently a corruption of soss, is, according to Mr. Wright's Archaic Dictionary, a word used in the East of England to signify "any strange mixture."

Soudie, broth; from the old English seethe, to boil. (See POWSODIE, ante.)

Sourock, wild sorrel; any sour vegetable.

Souter, a shoemaker, a cobbler. This word occurs in early English literature, though it is now obsolete.

Ploughmen and pastourers,
And other common labourers,
Souters and shepherds.

—Piers Ploughman.

The devil makes a reeve to preach,
Or a souter, a shipman, or a bear.

—CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales.

"Mair whistle than woo,"
As the souter said when he sheared the soo.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Souters' wives are aye ill shod.

—Idem.

Sowens, flummery; a mixture of oatmeal and sour milk.

Sowie, diminutive of sow. An implement of war for demolishing walls, which the English call a ram, and the French un belier, or a battering ram; the Scotch call it a sow, from its weight and rotundity.

They laid their sowies to the wall
Wi' mony a heavy peal;
But he threw ower to them again
Baith pitch and tar-barrel.

—SCOTT'S Border Minstrelsy:
Auld Maitland.

Sowth, to try over a tune with a low whistle, to hum a tune to one's self involuntarily.

On braces when we please, then,
We'll sit and sowth a tune,
Syne rhyme till't; we'll time till't,
And sing't when we hae done.

—BURNS: To Davie, a Brother Poet.

Sowther, or soother, to solder, to make amends for, to cement, to heal.

A towmond o' trouble, should that be my fa',

Ae night o' good fellowship sowthers it a'.

—BURNS: Contented wi' Little.

Spae, to tell fortunes, to predict. Etymology uncertain; derived by Jamieson from the Icelandic, but probably connected with spell, a magic charm or enchantment, or with spes, hope; spae-wife, a fortune-teller; spae-book, magic book, a fortune-teller's book.

The black spae-book from his breast he took,
Impressed with mony a warlock spell;

And the book it was wrote by Michael
Scott,
He held in awe the fiends o' hell.
—LORD SOULIS: Border Minstrelsy.

Spae, which in Scottish means to prophesy, has no connection with the English spae, written by Johnson spay, to castrate a female animal for the purpose of producing barrenness.

Be dumb, you beggars of the rhyming trade,
Geld your loose wits, and let the muse be spay'd.

A singular misconception of the true meaning of a spay'd, or one who is spay'd, has led to a current English proverb, that will doubtless drop out of use as soon as its true origin is understood. In Taylor's works (1630), quoted by Halliwell, occurs the couplet:—

I think it good plaine English without fraude
To call a spade a spade, a bawd a bawd.

The juxtaposition of bawd and spade in this passage suggests that the true reading should be spay'd. In Dr. Donne's satires, anterior to the works of Taylor, there appears the line:—

I call a bawd a bawd, a spae'd a spae'd.

Nares in his Glossary asks very naturally, "why the spade (rather than the poker, or hoe, or plough, or pitchfork, or any other implement) was especially chosen to enter into this figurative expression is not clear." If he had known the true meaning of the word spay'd or spae'd, the obscurity would have been cleared up.

Spairge, to sprinkle, to scatter about as liquids. From the French asperger, to sprinkle with water.

When in yon cavern grim and sootie,

Closed under hatches,

Spairges about the brimstone cootie.*

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Spank, to move rapidly; spanker, one who walks with a quick and lively step; spanky, frisky, lively, sprightly. The phrase "a spanking tit" is still employed by the sporting brotherhood of the lower classes to signify a fast horse. The English spank, to beat, to slap, seems to be derivable from the same idea of rapidity of motion which pertains to the Scottish word, and to be suggestive of the quick and oft-repeated motion of the hands in spanking or slapping the posterior. Spanker-ing, nimble, active, alert. The word is derived by Jamieson from the Teutonic spannen, to extend. The German word, however, does not exactly mean extend, but to put the horses to a carriage, as the French atteler.

Spargeon, plaster; spargeoner, a plaisterer; from the French asperger, to sprinkle.

Spartle, from the Flemish sparteln, to move the limbs quickly or

* Cootie signifies a large dish, and also the broth or other liquor contained in it.

convulsively, to kick about helplessly or involuntarily. Sprattle, to struggle or sprawl.

Listening the doors and windows rattle,
I thought me on the ourie cattle,
Or silly sheep, wha bide this brattle
O' winter war,
And through the drift deep-lairing sprattle,
Beneath a scaur.

—BURNS: A Winter Night.

No more was made for that lady,
For she was lying dead;
But a' was for her bonnie bairn,
Lay sprattling at her side.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads.

Spatch-cock, a fowl split open, to be broiled in haste, on a sudden demand for dinner from an unexpected guest; a corruption of dispatch-cock, a cock quickly cooked. The word is common in the United States.

Spate, a flood or freshet, from the overflow of a river or lake; also metaphorically an overflow of idle talk.

The water was great and mickle o' spate.
—KINMONT Willie.

Even like a mighty river that runs down in spate to the sea.

—W. E. AVTOUN: Blackwood's Magazine.

He trail'd the foul sheets down the gait,
Thought to have washed them on a stane,

The burn was risen out of spate.

—RITSON'S Caledonian Muse: The Wife of Auchtermuchty.

While crashing ice, borne on the roaring spate,
Sweeps dams an' mills an' brigs a' to the gate.

—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

And down the water wi' speed she ran,
While tears in spates fa' fast frae her e'e.
—BORDER Minstrelsy: Jock o' the Side.

The Laird of Balmamoon was a truly eccentric character. He joined with his drinking propensities a great zeal for the Episcopal Church. One Sunday, having visitors, he read the services and prayers with great solemnity and earnestness. After dinner, he, with the true Scottish hospitality of the time, set to, to make his guests as drunk as possible. Next day, when they took their departure, one of the visitors asked another what he thought of the laird. "Why, really," he replied, "sic a spate o' praying, and sic a spate o' drinking. I never knew in all the course of my life."—DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

Spate, or spait, is from the Gaelic speid, a mountain torrent suddenly swollen by rain. In the North of England, according to Messrs. Halliwell and Wright, a spait signifies a more than usually heavy downpour of rain; and in the county of Durham it signifies a pool formed by the rain.

Spaul, sometimes written spald, a shoulder; from the French capaule, or épaule, often used to signify a leg or limb. "To spaul," according to Jamieson, "is to push out the limbs like a dying animal."

The late Duchess of Gordon sat at dinner next to an Englishman, who was carving, and who made it a boast that he was thoroughly master of the Scottish language. Her Grace turned to him and said, "Rax me a spaul o' that bubbly-jock!" The unfortunate man was completely nonplussed.—DEAN RAMSAY.

The gander being longer in the spauld.
—NOCTES Ambrosianae.

Wi' spur on heel, or splent (armour) on spauld.

—BORDER Minstrelsy: Kinmont Willie.

The Scotch employ the French word gigot for a leg of mutton; but they do not say a spaul of mutton for a shoulder.

Spean (sometimes spelled spane or spayn), to wean. The English wean is derived from the German wohnen, or entwohnen; and the Scottish spean from the Flemish and Low Dutch speen, which has the same meaning. Speaning-brash, an eruption in children, which often occurs at weaning-time.

Withered beldams auld and droll,
Rigwoodie hags wad spean a foal,
Louping and flinging on a crummock,
I wonder did na turn thy stomach.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

The meaning of spean, as used by Burns, implies that the hags were so very hideous, that, had they been brood mares, a foal would in disgust have refused to imbibe nourishment from them.

Speer-windit or spier-windit, out of breath or wind from asking too many questions, tired of asking; a word most applicable to impudent barristers cross-examining a witness; from speer, or spier, to inquire.

Spell, an interval. The Scotch and the Americans say: "a spell of work," "a spell of idleness," "a spell of bad weather," "a spell of good weather," "a spell of amusement," &c. The derivation of the word is supposed to be from the Dutch and Flemish spel, the German spiele, to play. Possibly, though not certainly, the root is the Gaelic speal, to mow, cut down; and thence a stroke, i.e., a stroke of good or bad weather, &c. The word has recently become current in English.

Spence, a store-room next to a kitchen, where the provisions are kept; an inner apartment in a small house. The word is supposed to be derived from dispense, to distribute; whence dispensary, the place where medicines are distributed.

Wi' tottering step he reached the spence,
Where soon the ingle blazed fu' hie;
The auld man thought himself at hame,
And the tear stood twinkling in his e'e.
—PICKERING: Dornocht Sea, or the Auld Minstrel.

Our Bardie lanely keeps the spence
Sin' Maillie's dead.

—BURNS: Poor Maillie's Elegy.

"Edward," said the sub-Prior, "you will supply the English knight here, in this spence, with suitable food and accommodation for the night."—SCOTT: The Monastery.

The word is still used in the north of England for a buttery, also for a cupboard, a pantry, and a private room in a farm house.

Yet I had leven she and I
Were both togdyir secretly
In some corner in the spence.

—HALLIWELL.

Spier, to inquire, to ask after; of unknown etymology. The derivation from the Gaelic speur, clear, whence by extension of meaning, an inquiry, to make clear, is scarcely satisfactory.

Mony a ane spiers the gate he knows full well.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scotts Proverbs.

I am Spes, quoth he,
And spier after a knight,
That took me a mandement
Upon the mount of Sinai.

—Piers Ploughman.

I spiered for my cousin fu' couthie and sweet.

—BURNS: Last May a Braw Wooer.

When lost, folks never ask the way they want,

They spier the gait.

—ROBERT LEIGHTON: Scotch Words.

A very expressive derivation of spier is back-spier, meaning to cross-examine.—R. DRENNAN.

Her niece was asking a great many questions, and coming over and over the same ground, demanding an explanation how this and that had happened, till at last the old lady lost patience, and burst forth—"I winna be back-spiered, noo, Polly Fullerton."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Sperthe, a spear, a javelin, or, more properly, a battle-axe; a word that might well be rescued from oblivion for the use of rhymers, often hardly pushed for a rhyme to earth, birth, girth, and mirth—all well, or too well word.

His helmet was laced,
At his saddle girth was a good steel sperthe,

Full ten pound weight and more.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Eve of St. John.

Spin-drift, sometimes corruptly written and pronounced speen-drift and spune-drift, snow driven by the wind in whirls or spinings in the air, and finally accumulates on the ground when the force of the wind is exhausted.

Spirlie, a person with slender legs; spindle-shanked, slim, thin, often combined with lang; as, "A lang spirlie," a tall slender person. From the Gaelic speir, a shank, a claw; speireach, having slender limbs.

Spleuchan, a Highland purse; from the Gaelic spliuchan, an outside pouch or receptacle of small matters, and spluch, anything that hangs down.

Deil mak' his king's-hood [scrotum] in a spleuchan.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Splore, a riotously merry meeting; to make a splore, to create a sensation. The Americans have splurge, a word with the same meaning. The derivation is unknown.

In Poosie Nancy's held the splore.

Wi' quaffing and laughing,
They ranted and they sang.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

The squads o' chieft that lo'ed a splore,
On winter evenings never ca';
Their blythesome moments now are o'er,
Since Rabbie gaed an' left them a'.

—RICHARD GALL: On the Death of Burns.

Splute, to exaggerate in narrative, to indulge in fiction. Jamieson derives this word from the French exploit, but it is more probably a corruption of the Gaelic spleadh, a romance, a boast, a gasconade, a vain-glorious assertion; spleadhaich, hyperbolical.

Spoacher, a poacher, one who steals game. The Scottish word seems to have been the original form, and to have become poacher by the elision of the initial s, a not uncommon result in words from the Celtic, as the Welsh hen, old, is the same as the Gaelic sean; the English nag is the same as snag, to snarl or say provoking things, as is the custom with spiteful women if they wish to quarrel with their husbands. The English poacher is usually derived from poke, the French poché, a pocket, pouch, or bag, because the poacher, like the sportsman, bags his game. But if the Scottish spoacher be the elder word, it will be necessary to account for the lost s. This is supplied in the Gaelic spog, to seize violently, as birds of prey do with their claws and talons, and spogadh, seizure. Jamieson was of opinion that the s was added in the Scottish word; but this would be a singular instance, contradicted by all previous experience of similar cases.

Spoutie, a word of contempt for a too fluent orator, or a garrulous boaster; one who, according to a wealthy Scottish philanthropist, is too plentifully endowed with "the pernicious gift of the gab—the curse of all free countries, especially of Great Britain and the United States." To spout is a common English vulgarism that signifies to talk at an inordinate length to a public meeting. The Americans derisively call it to orate.

Sprack, lively, alert, animated; common in Scotland and provinces in the south of England.

Spraikle, sprackle, sprauchle, to clamber up a hill with great exertion and difficulty. From the Gaelic spracail, strong, active. The English words sprack and sprag seem to be of the same parentage.

I, rhymer Robin, alias Burns,
October twenty-third;
A ne'er-to-be-forgotten day,
Sae far I sprackled up the brae,
I dinnèd wi' a lord.

—BURNS: The Dinner with Lord Daer.

Wad ye hae naeboddy spraikle up the brae but yoursel, Geordie.—SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel.

Spring, a lively tune.

Sae rantingly, sae wantonly,
He played of spring
Beneath the gallows tree.

—Old Song: Macpherson's Farewell.

Let him play a spring on his ain fiddle
(i.e., let him have his own way; let him ride his own hobby.)—DEAN RAMSAY.

Ye are as lang in tuning your pipes as anither man wad be in playing a spring.—Scottish Proverb.

Sproage. This eccentric-looking word signifies, according to Jamieson, to go out courting at night, to wander by the light of the moon or stars. Alexander Ross, in "Helenore, or the Fortunate Shepherdess," has the lines:—

We maun marry now ere lang;
Folk will speak o's, and fash us wi' the kirk,
Gin we be seen thegither in the mirk.

Neither Burns, Allan Ramsay, nor Scott employs this word, and its origin is wholly unknown, unless the Gaelic sporach, to incite, excite, or instigate, may supply a clue.

Spulzie, to despoil, to ravage, to devastate, to lay waste; from depouiller, to spoil, or despoil.

Spulzie him, spulzie him! said Craigievar,
Spulzie him presentlie,
For I wad lay my lugs in pawn,
He'd nae gude will at me.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: The Death of John Seton.

Spune-hale, in such restored health as to be able to take one's ordinary food, one's kail or parritch, with a good appetite. Parritch-hale and meat-hale are synonymous.

Spung, a purse that fastens with a clasp; sporan, the large purse worn by the Highlanders on full-dress occasions.

But wastefu' was the want of a',
Without a yeuk they gar ane claw,
When wickedly they bid us draw
Our siller spungs,

For this and that to mak them braw
And lay their tongues,

—ALLAN RAMSAY: Last Speech of a Wretched Miser.

Spunk, a match, a spark; spunkie, fiery, high spirited; also an "ignis fatuus" or will o' the wisp. The word is derived by Jamieson from the Gaelic spog, rotten wood, or tinder, easily inflammable; but it is questionable whether the root is not the Teutonic funk, a sparkle of light; funkeln, to sparkle; and ausfunkeln, to sparkle out, to shine forth. Ausfunk is easily corrupted into spunk and spunk.

Erskine, a spunkie Norland billie,
And mony ither;
Whom auld Demosthenes and Tully,
Might own as brithers.

—BURNS: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

If mair they deave us wi' their din
O' patronage intrusion;
We'll light a spunk, and every skin
We'll rin them aff in fusion,
Like oil some day.

—BURNS: The Ordination.

And oft from moss-traversing spunkies,
Decoy the wight that late and drunk is.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Spurtle or parritch spurtle, a rounded stick or bar of hard wood, used in preference to a spoon or ladle for stirring oatmeal porridge in the process of cooking. Jamieson—who seldom dives deeper than the Teutonic—derives the word from spryten, the Latin assula. The Gaelic has sparr or sparran, a little wooden bar or bolt; and the Flemish has sport, with the same meaning; and also that of the rung of a ladder (a bar of wood which a Scottish housewife, in default of any better spurtle, might conveniently use for the purpose). Good bairns in the olden times when oatmeal porridge was the customary food of the peasantry, were often rewarded by having the spurtle to lick in addition to their share of the breakfast.

Our gudeman cam' hame at e'en,
And hame cam' he;
And there he saw a braw broad sword,
Where nae sword should be.

How's this? gude wife,
How's this, quo he,
How came this sword here
Without the leave o' me?

A sword! quo she,
Aye, a sword, quo he;
Ye auld blind doited bodie,
And blinder may ye be,
'Tis but a parritch spurtle,
My minnie gied to me.

Far hae I travelled,
And muckle hae I seen,
But scabbards upon spurtles,
Saw I never nane!

—Our Gudeman.

Staffa, the name of the well-known island of the West that contains the "cave of Fingal." Colonel Robertson, in "The Gaelic Topography of Scotland," has omitted to give the etymology of the word. Many people suppose it to be English, and akin to Stafford. It is, however, pure Gaelic, and accurately descriptive of the natural formation of the cave, being compounded of stuadh (dh silent), a pillar or pillars, column or columns; and uamh (uav or uaf), a cave, whence stua-uaf or staffa, the cave of pillars or columns.

Staig, a young, unbroken stallion. In the North of England, this word tag, or staig, is applied to any young male quadruped, and, in contempt, to a strong, vulgar, romping girl, whose manners are masculine. The word is also applied to the Turkey cock and the gander. From the German steigen, to mount, to raise, to stick up, to stand erect. In the old Norse, steggr signifies male.

It's neither your stat nor your staig I shall crave,
But gie me your wife, man, for her I must have.

—BURNS: The Carle o' Kellyburn Bracs.

Stance, situation, standing-place, or foundation. This word has not yet been admitted into the English dictionaries.

No! sooner may the Saxon lance,
Unfix Benledi from his stance.

—SCOTT: Lady of the Lake.

We would recommend any Yankee believer in England's decay to take his stance in Fleet Street or any of our great thoroughfares, and ask himself whether it would be wise to meddle with any member of that busy and strenuous crowd.—Blackwood's Magazine, June 1869.

Stank, a pool, a ditch, an entrenchment filled with water for the defence of a fortress. This word, with the elision of the initial letter, becomes the English tank, a receptacle for water. Stankit, entrenched. From the French etaing, or estaing; the Gaelic staing, a ditch, a pool; staingichte, entrenched.

I never drank the Muses stank,
Castilia's burn and a' that;
But there it streams, and richtly reams,
My Helicon, I ca' that.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

Clavers and his Highland men
 Cam down among the raw, man;
 Ower bush, ower bank, ower ditch, ower
stank,
 She flang amang them a', man.
 —Battle of Killiecrankie.

Stanners, gravel, small stones on the banks of a stream, shingle on the sea shore.

Yestreen the water was in spate,
 The stanners a' were curled.
 —Border Minstrelsy: Water Kelpie.

Stark, strong; from the German.
 The word, however, is English, with a different meaning, as in the phrase, stark naked, utterly naked.

Fill fu' and hand fu' maks a stark man.
 —Old Proverb.

Staumrel, a stupid person;
saumer, to stutter, to be incoherent in speech, to stammer;
 from the German stumme, dumb;
 and stumpf, stupid, the Flemish and Dutch stumper, a fool, a silly and idle person.

Nae langer, thrifty citizens, an' douce,
 Meet owre a pint or in the council house,
 But staumrel, corky-headed gentry,
 The herriment and ruin of the country.
 —BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

The lad was aye a perfect stump.
 —JAMIESON.

Staves. "To go to staves" is a proverbial expression used in Scotland to signify to go to ruin, to fall to pieces like a barrel, when the hoops that bind the staves together are removed.

Staw, to surfeit, to disgust. Etymology uncertain; not Flemish,

as Jamieson supposes, but probably from the Gaelic stad or stadh (pronounced stà), to desist, or cause to desist.

Is there that o'er his French ragout,
 Or olio that wad stau a sow.
 —BURNS: To a Haggis.

Curryin's a grand thing, when the edge
 o' the appetite's a wee turned, and ye're rather beginnin' to be stawed. —Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Steek, to close, to shut, to fasten with a pin.

Sages their solemn e'en may steek.
 —BURNS: Cry and Prayer.

Steek the awmie.
 —SIR WALTER SCOTT: Donald Caird.

Ye're owre bonnie! ye're owre bonnie!
 Sae steek that witchin' e'e,
 It's light flees gleamin' through my brain.
 —JAMES BALLANTINE.

Your purse was steekit when that was paid for.

When the steed's stown steik the stable-door.
 —ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Steeks, the interstices of any woven or knitted fabric, stitches;
steek, probably from stitch, as kirk
 from church.

He draws a bonnie silken purse,
 As lang's my tail, where, through the steeks,
 The yellow-lettered Geordie [guinea] keeks.
 —BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Steenies, guineas, foreign or other gold coins; derivation unknown, unless the term be a mock depreciation of the precious metal, from stone, or stein, applied upon the same principle that money is called dross or filthy lucre.

What though we canna boast of our guineas, O,
We've plenty of Jockies and Jeanies, O,
An' these, I'm certain, are
More daintier by far
Than a pock full of yellow steenies, O.

—REV. JOHN SKINNER: The Old Man's Song.

Steeve, or steive, firm, erect,
stout; from the English stiff,
and the Flemish stijf.

Sit ye steive in your saddle seat,
For he rides sicker who never fa's.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Sten, to spring to one side, a sudden motion in the wrong direction; to turn away, to twist, to bend; stennis, a sprain. From the Gaelic staon, awry, askew; and staonaich, to bend, to twist, to turn. Jamieson erroneously derives sten from extend.

Yestreen at the valentines' dealing,
My heart to my mou' gied a sten,
For thrice I drew ane without failing,
And thrice it was written Tam Glen.

—BURNS: Tam Glen.

Stevin or steven. Before the introduction from the Latin vox, and the French voix, of the word voice into the English and Scottish languages, the word stevin was employed. It was used by Chaucer in England, and by Gawin Douglas in Scotland. From its resemblance to the Teutonic stimme, a voice, and stimmen, voices, the Flemish stem, it is probable that it was a corruption or variation of that word.

With dreary heart and sorrowful steven.
—Morte Arthur.

Betwixt the twelfth hour and eleven,
I dreamed an angel cam frae heaven,
With pleasant stevin sayand on hie,
Tailyors and souters, blest be ye!

—DUNBAR: ALLAN RAMSAY'S
Evergreen.

Lang may thy steven fill with glee
The glens and mountains of Lochlee.

—BEATTIE: To Mr. Alexander Ross.

Quoth Jane, "My steven, sir, is blunted
sair,
And singing frae me frighted off wi' care;
But gin ye'll tak' it as I now can gie't,
Ye're welcome til't—and my sweet blessing wi't."

—ROSS'S Helenore.

The rhymes to "heaven" in Scottish and English poetry are few, and stevin would be an agreeable addition to the number if it were possible to revive it.

Steward, a director, a manager, an administrator. As a patronymic, the word is sometimes spelled stewart and stuart, and has been derived from the Teutonic stede-ward, one who occupies the place delegated to him by another; or from the Icelandic stia, work, and weard, a guard or guardian. It seems, however, to have an indigenous origin in the Gaelic stiuir, to lead, direct, guide, steer, superintend, manage, &c.; and ard, high or chief. The "Steward of Scotland" was in early times the chief officer of the crown, and next in power and dignity to the king. There was a similar functionary in England:—

The Duke of Norfolk is the first,
And claims to be high Steward.

The attributes of the "Steward of Scotland" are set forth by Erskine as quoted in Jamieson; and the last holder of the office—who became king of Scotland—gave the name of his function to his royal descendants. In its humbler sense, of the steward of a great household, or of a ship, the name is still true to its Gaelic derivation, and signifies the chief director of his particular department.

It has been suggested in the "Gaelic Etymology of the Languages of Western Europe," that the true etymon of stew or stu (the first syllable of steward and stuart) is the Gaelic stuth, pronounced stu, which signifies any strong liquor, as well as food, sustenance, or nourishment for the body; and that consequently steward means chief butler, or provider of the royal household. There is much to be said in favour of this hypothesis, but the derivation from stiur seems preferable.

The Irish Gaelic spells steward in the English sense stiobhard. The Scottish Gaelic has it stiubhard; but the words thus written have no native etymology, and are merely phonetic renderings of an obsolete Gaelic term, re-borrowed from the modern English. The suggested Teutonic etymology of steward from stede-ward, has no foundation in the Teutonic languages. Steward in Germany is Verwalter, administrator or director; and Haushofmeister, master of the household. In Flemish, bestieren signifies to administer, to direct; and bestierder, an administrator, a director, a steward.

Stey, steep, perpendicular. In Cumberland and Westmoreland, a mountain of peculiar steepness is called a sty; and in Berkshire, sty signifies a ladder. Stey and sty are both from the German stiegen, and the Flemish stijgen, to mount, to climb.

Set a stout heart to a stey brae.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The steyest brae thou woudst hae face't at.
—BURNS: The Auld Farmer to His Auld Mare, Maggie.

Stickit minister, a term of obloquy in Scotland for a candidate for holy orders who has failed to pass the necessary examination, or to give satisfaction to the congregation before whom he preached the probationary sermon. The phrase is akin to the vulgar English—"old stick in the mud."

Puir lad! the first time he tried to preach, he stickit his sermon.—JAMIESON.

A speech is stickit when the speaker hesitates and is unable to proceed.—Idem.

Still. This word is sometimes employed in the Scottish vernacular in a sense, which it possesses no longer in English, that of taciturn, or reticent of speech. "A still dour man," signifies a taciturn, reserved, and hard man.

Stirk, a bullock; stirkie, a bull calf.

There's aye water where the stirkie drowns (i.e., there's a reason or cause for everything; or there's never a smoke without fire).

Stob, to push the foot accidentally against a stone or other impediment in the ground. "I have stobbed my toe," said the late President Lincoln, in explanation of his temporary lameness; from the Gaelic stob, a stake, a thrust, or anything thrust in the ground; a stick, a stump, any stalk broken or cut and still projecting from the ground; whence the English word stubble.

Stoit, to stagger.

And aye as on the road he stoitit,
His knees on ane anither knockit [knocked together].

—GEORGE BRATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Stound, a moment, a very short space of time; also, a quick sudden momentary pain. From the German stund, an hour.

Gang in and seat you on the sunks a' round,
And ye'se be sair'd wi' plenty in a stound.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

And aye the stound, the deadly wound,
Came frae her e'en sae bonnie blue.

—BURNS: I Gae'd a Waifu Gate.

Stoup or stoop, a flagon, a pitcher, a jug. Pint-stoup, a bottle or jug containing a pint. This word was used by Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, and other dramatists of the Elizabethan era; it has long been obsolete in England, but survives with undiminished vitality in Scotland.

Come, Lieutenant! I have a stoup of wine, and here without are a brace of Cyprian gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of black Othello.—Othello.

Set me the stoup of wine upon that table.

—Hamlet.

And surely ye'll be your pint-stoup,
As sure as I'll be mine.

—BURNS: Auld Lang Syne.

Water-stoups? quo' he;
Aye, water-stoups, quo' she—
Far hae I ridden,
And muckle I hae seen;
But silver spurs on water-stoups
Saw I never nane!

—HERD'S Collection: Our Guidman.

The etymology of stoup or stoop has long been contested. Johnson derives it from the Dutch and Flemish stop, a cork or stopper of a bottle; the German stöpsel; but this can scarcely be the origin of the Scottish word, for a milk-stoup, a water-stoup, a can, a pitcher, a bucket, a pail, are not corked or stopped. In some Scottish glossaries a stoup is said to be a tin pot, and in others it is defined as a jug with a handle; while in Northumberland, according to Wright's Provincial Dictionary, a stoop signifies a barrel. In Gaelic, stop means a wooden vessel for carrying water, a measure for liquids, or a flagon; and stopan signifies a small flagon. Between the Flemish and Gaelic derivations it is difficult to decide; but the Gaelic, which applies the word to wide and open utensils, seems to be preferable, at least in comprehensiveness.

Stour, dust in motion, and metaphorically trouble, vexation, or disturbance; stourie, dusty. The word is akin to the English stir, and in its metaphorical sense is synonymous with the Scottish steer, as in the song "What's a the steer, kimmer?" what's the disturbance, or in the broad vernacular, what's the row? "To kick up a dust" is a slang expression that has a similar origin.

Vestreen I met you on the moor,
Ye spak na, but gaed by like stour;
Ye geck at me because I'm poor.

—BURNS: Tibbie, I hae Seen the Day.

After service, the betheral of the strange clergyman said to his friend the other betheral, "I think our minister did weel. He aye gars the stour flee out o' the cushion." To which the other replied, with a calm feeling of superiority, "Stour out o' the cushion! Hoot! our minister, sin' he cam' wi' us, has dung [knocked or beaten] the guts out o' twa Bibles."—DEAN RAMSAY.

How blithely wad I bide the stoure,
A weary slave frae sun to sun,
Could I the rich reward secure
Of lovely Mary Morrison.

—BURNS.

Burns uses the word in the sense of mould, earth, or soil, as in his "Address to the Daisy:"—

Wee, modest, crimson-tippet flower,
Thou'st met me in an evil hour,
For I man crush among the stour,
Thy slender stem.

Stour, in the sense of strife, was a common English word in the time of Chaucer and his predecessors.

Stowlins, stownlins, by stealth, stealthily, or stolen moments unobserved, or expecting to be unobserved.

Rob stowlins pried her bonnie mou,
Fu' cosie in the neuk for't
Unseen that night.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Stoyte, stoiter, to stagger, stumble, or walk unsteadily; from the Flemish stooten, to push against, to stumble or cause to stumble.

When staggirand and swaggirand,
They stoyter hame to sleep.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Vision.

Blind chance let her snapper and stoyte
on the way.

—BURNS: Contented wi' Little.

At length wi' drink and courtin' dizzy,
He stoitered up and made a face.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

To stoitle over, in consequence of infirmity, without being much hurt. To tyne or lose the stoyte, is a metaphor for being off the proper line of conduct.—JAMIESON.

Strae death, straw death, death in bed, natural death. This strong but appropriate expression comes from the Middle Ages, when lawlessness and violence were chronic.

Strappan or strappin', strong, tall, burly, well-grown; the English strapping, a strapping youth.

The miller was strappin', the miller was ruddy.

—BURNS: Meg o' the Mill.

Wi' kindly welcome Jenny brings him
ben,

A strappin' youth—he tak's the mother's eye.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

This word comes from the Gaelic streap, to climb up, i.e., in stature, to grow tall.

Streik, to stretch; from the Dutch and Flemish strekken, German strecken, to extend. This word is used in a variety of ways, unknown to or unfrequent in English; as, "Tak' your ain streik," take your own course; streikin, tall and active; streik, to go quickly, i.e., to stretch out in walking; tight or tightly drawn, i.e., excessively drawn, stretched out, or extended.

Strone or stroan, a ludicrous word for the habitual urination of dogs when out on their rambles. It is introduced by Burns in his description of the rich man's dog, Caesar, the fine Newfoundland, who was the friend and companion of Luath, the poor man's dog:—

Though he was of high degree,
The fient o' pride, nae pride had he.

Nae tauted tyke, though e'er sae duddie,
But he wad stan't as glad to see him,
And stroan't on stanes and hillocks wi' him.

The word seems to have been originally applied to the action of the dog in first smelling the place where another dog has been before for a similar purpose, and to be derived from the Gaelic srone (pronounced strone), a nose; and sronagaich, to trace by the scent as dogs do.

Stroop, a spout. Stroopie, the spout of a kettle; also a gutter or watercourse.

Struishle, to struggle pertinaciously, and in vain, against continually recurring difficulties; from the Femish struikelen, to stumble, to fall down.

A tradesman employed to execute a very difficult piece of carved work, being asked how he was getting on, answered—"I'm struishling awa' like a writer [lawyer] tryin' to be honest!"—Laird of Logan.

Strunt, alcoholic liquor of any kind; a fit of ill-humour; also, an affront, or a sturdy, arrogant walk.

Strunt and sturt are birds of ae feather,
And aft are seen on the wing thegither.
—Scots Proverb.

Burns makes the disagreeable insect that he saw on a lady's bonnet at church "strunt rarely over her gauze and lace." The word, in this sense, seems to be a corruption of the English strut. Stront is a low Teutonic word for stercus humanum; but this can scarcely be the root of strunt in any of the senses in which it is used in the Scottish language; though strunty, an epithet applied to any one in a fit of such ill-humour as to be excessively disagreeable to all around him, may not be without some remote connection with the Teutonic idea.

Study or brown study. This expression seems to have first appeared in literature in the "Case Altered" of Ben Jonson, who was of Scottish parentage, though born in London:—

Faiks! this brown study suits not with your black; your habit and your thought are of two colours.

(See BROWN STUDY, ante, p. 19.)

Stug. This Scottish word is used in a variety of senses—all allied to the idea of stiffness, erectness, rigidity, hardness, prickliness, &c., as the English stiff, stick, stock, stuck up, and the corresponding verb derived from the noun; as stug, to stab or stick with a sharp weapon; stug, the trunk or fragment of a decayed tree projecting above the ground; stug, a hard, masculine woman; stug, obstinate; stugger, an obstinate person; stug, a thorn; stugs, stubble. From the Dutch and Flemish stug, inflexible, stiff, obstinate; the German stich, to stab, to pierce; sticheln, to prick, to sting.

Sturt, strife, contention, disturbance; also, to strive, to contend; a word apparently akin to stour in its poetical sense of confusion. It is akin to, and possibly derived from, the German stürzen, to disturb, to overthrow.

And aye the less they hae to sturt them,
In like proportion less will hurt them.

—BURNS: The Twa Dogs.

I've lived a life of sturt and strife,
I die by treachery.

—Macpherson's Farewell.

Styme, a particle, an iota, an atom; the least possible quantity; a blink, a gleam, a glimpse.

He held, she drew, fu' steeve that day,
Might no man see a styme.

—Christ's Kirk on the Green,

I've seen me daz't upon a time,
I scarce could wink or see a styme.

—BURNS: Naething like Nappy.

The faintest form of an object; a glimpse or transitory glance, as, "There's no a styme o' licht here."—JAMIESON.

From styme is formed stymic, one who sees indistinctly; and stymel, which, according to Jamieson, is a name of reproach given to one who does not perceive quickly what another wishes him to see. Jamieson hints, rather than asserts, that styme is from the Welsh ystum, form, or figure; but as styme is the absence of form and figure, something faint, indistinct, and small, rather than a substantial entity, the etymology is unsatisfactory. The word seems to have some relationship to the Gaelic stim, or stiom, a slight puff, or wreath of smoke; and thence to mean anything slight, transitory, and indistinct.

Sugh, or sough, a sigh, a breath. Greek psyche, the breath of life, the soul. To keep a calm sugh, is to be discreetly silent about anything, not to give it breath; sugh-siller, erroneously printed sow-siller by Jamieson, means hush-money.

Sunkets, scraps of food, scrans (q. v.).

In Scotland there lived a humble beggar,
He had neither house nor hauld nor hame,
But he was weel likit by ilka body,
And they gied him sunkets to rax his wame;
A nievefu' o' meal, a handfu' o' groats,
A daud o' a bannock, or pudding bree,
Cauld parritch, or the licking o' plates,
Wad mak him as blithe as a body could be.

—Tea Table Miscellany.

Sunket-time is meal-time. The 'etymology of sunket is uncertain. Herd derived it from something.—JAMIESON.

Whenever an uncertain etymology in English or Lowland Scotch is avowed, it would be well if the dubious philologists would look into the Gaelic, which they seldom do. In the case of sunket they would have found something better in that language than the English something. Sanntach signifies a dainty, or something that is desired, coveted, or longed after; and sanntaichte, that which is desired. This word would be easily convertible by the Lowland Scotch into sunket. Halliwell, in his Archaic Dictionary, has sun-cote, a dainty, which he says is a Suffolk word.

Sumph, a stupid or soft-headed person. Jamieson derives the word from the German sumpf, and Flemish somp, a bog, a marsh, a morass; a possible but not a convincing etymology. Halliwell has sump, a heavy weight, whence he adds, a heavy stupid fellow is so called.

The soul of life, the heaven below,
Is rapture-giving woman;
Ye surly sumphs who hate the name,
Be mindfu' o' your mither.

—BURNS.

Sumph, an admirable word.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Swack, to deal a heavy blow; akin to the vulgar English whack, to beat severely; a swashing blow, a heavy blow; etymology uncertain. The Teutonic schwack, weak, has an opposite meaning, though there may be some connection of idea between a heavy blow and a blow that weakens him on whom it falls.

When Percy wi' the Douglas met,
I wat he was fu' fain,
They swakkit their swords till sair they
swat,
And the blood ran down like rain.

—Battle of Otterbourne.

In another stanza of this vigorous old ballad, occur the lines:—

Then Percy and Montgomery met,
That either of other were fain;
They swappit swords, and they twa
swat,
And the blood run down between.

Here swappit seems employed in the same sense as swakkit, and is possibly a variation of sneop, to come down with a heavy blow.

Swacken, to grow weak; from the German schwach, weak.

Wi' that her joints began to swacken,
And she scour'd like ony maukin (hare).
—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha.

Swagers, men married to sisters.

Jamieson goes to the Swedish and Icelandic for the derivation of this word, but it is to be found nearer home in the Flemish zwager, and the German schwager, a brother-in-law.

Swank, active, agile, supple; swankie, an active, clever young fellow, fit for his work, and not above it; from the Flemish and German. Halliwell says that swanky is a northern English word for a strong, strapping fellow; and swanking for big, large.

Thou ance was in the foremost rank,
A filly, buirdly, steeve, and swank.

—BURNS: The Auld Farmer to his Auld Mare, Maggie.

At e'en at the gloaming,
Nae swankies are roaming,
Bout stackin' the lassies at bogle to play.
—The Flowers of the Forest.

The etymological root of swankie is apparently the Teutonic schwank, droll; used in a sense equivalent to the French drôle, which means a funny fellow, a droll fellow, or a fellow in a contemptuous and depreciatory sense. Mr. Thomas Wright, in his Archaic Dictionary of Local and Provincial English, says that swankie is a northern word for a strapping fellow; and that swamp signifies lean, unthriving, which suggests that possibly swampie is a corruption of swankie, with a slight shade of difference in the phrase; the meaning for "a strapping fellow," though suggestive of strength, may be also suggestive of tallness and leanness. The Danish has svang, withered, lean; but it also has svanger, which means large-bellied, and is applied to a pregnant woman; the Flemish and Dutch have svanger with the same meaning.

Swankies young in braw braid claiht,
Are springin' owre the gutters.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Swarf, to faint, to swoon, to stupefy, or be stupefied; also, a fainting fit, a swoon.

And monie a huntit poor red coat,
For fear amaisit did swarf, man!

—BURNS: The Battle of Sherrieff-Muir.

He held up an arrow as he passed me;
and I swarf'd awa wi' fright.—SCOTT:
The Monastery.

Ye hae gar'd the puir wretch speak till she swarfs, and now ye stand as if ye never saw a woman in a dwam before.—
SCOTT: St. Ronan's Well.

The etymology of swarf is uncertain; the author of "Piers Ploughman" has swowe, to swoon, akin apparently to the Gaelic suain, to fall asleep. By some swarf has been derived from the Teutonic auswerfen, to throw out, or throw off; and as to fall in a fainting fit is to throw off temporarily the semblance of life, it is probable that the derivation is correct. Dwam, in the same sense as used by Sir Walter Scott, was formerly written dualm, and drealn. These latter words are evidently allied to the old English dwale, one of the popular names of the plant bella donna, or deadly night-shade; a word employed by the early poets Gower and Chaucer, and still in use in the Lowlands of Scotland, and the Northern counties of England.

Swatch, a specimen, a sample. Etymology uncertain.

On this side sits a chosen swatch,
Wi' screwed-up, grace-proud faces.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

That's just a swatch o' Hornbook's way;
Thus goes he on from day to day,
Thus does he poison, kill, and slay,
An's weel paid for't.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Swats, new ale or beer.

Tam had got planted unco right
Fast by an ingle bleezing finely,
Wi' reaming swats that drank divinely.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

I gie them a skelp as they're creeping
alang,

Wi' a cog o' uld swats and an auld
Scottish sang.

—BURNS: Contented wi' Little.

This word seems to be a ludicrous derivation from the Gaelic suath, to mix liquids, to rub or press barley; and suathadh, a mode of threshing barley; and thence, by extension of meaning, the juice of the barley. According to Jamieson, swats, or swaits, signifies new ale only. He derives it from the Anglo-Saxon swate, ale or beer; but the anterior root seems to be the Gaelic suath.

Sweer, difficult, heavy, slow, wearied; from the German schwer, heavy, hard, difficult.

Sweer to bed, and swecer up in the morning.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Sweere-arse and sweer-tree are, according to Jamieson, the names of a sport among Scottish children, in which two of them are seated on the ground, and, holding a stick between them, endeavour each of them to draw the other up from the sitting posture. The heaviest in the posterior wins the game.

Sweine, a swoon, a trance; from the Gaelic suain, sleep.

Sometimes she rade, sometimes she gaed
As she had done before, O,
And aye between she fell in a sweine
Lang ere she cam to Yarrow.

—The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow.

Swick or swyke, to deceive; also, a trick, a fraud, a deception; swicky and swickful, deceitful. Apparently from the Danish svige, to deceive, to cheat, to defraud; and svig, fraud, imposture.

"He played them a swick; I had nae swick o't," I had no blameableness in it.—JAMIESON.

Swift, the English whiff, a puff of smoke, a breath, a short interval, as a swift of sleep amid pain, a passing odour; swift, the sound of an object passing rapidly by, as of an arrow or bullet in its flight. Whether the English whiff, or the Scottish swift, were the original form, it is hopeless to inquire. The Scottish word seems to be a variety of the old English swippe, which Halliwell's Archaic Dictionary defines, to move rapidly; and swipper, nimble, quick.

Swine. "The swine's gone through it," is a proverbial expression which signifies that a marriage has been postponed or unduly delayed. Why the swine should have anything to do with a marriage is so incomprehensible as to suggest that the word does duty for some other, of which it is a corruption. Such a word exists in the Gaelic suain, a sleep, a deep sleep, a lethargy, whence the English swoon. Suain also signifies to entwine, to wrap round, to envelop, to tie up, to twist a cord or rope round anything; and hence may, in the proverbial saying above cited, signify an impediment. Either of the two meanings of suain would meet the sense of the phrase better than swine.

Swipes, a contemptuous term for small and weak beer; probably first given to it on account of its thinness, and the difficulty, or impossibility, of getting drunk upon it. From the Flemish zuipen, to drink to excess; the German saufen, to drink as animals do, who, however, wiser in this respect than men, never drink to excess. Souf, to drink, to quaff, and souffe, a drunkard, are Scottish words from the same root.

Die Juden sind narren die fressen kein schwein,
Die Turken sind narren die saufen kein wein.

[The Jews are fools, they eat no swine;
The Turks are fools, they swite no wine.]

—Old German Song; attributed to MARTIN LUTHER.

Swirl, to turn rapidly, to eddy, to curl.

His tail

Hung o'er his hurdies wi' a swirl.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

The mill wheel spun and swirl'd,
And the mill stream danced in the morning light,
And all its eddies curl'd.

—The Lump of Gold.

Swither, fear, doubt, perplexity, hesitation, dread. The etymology is doubtful, but is possibly from the German zwischen, between, i.e., between two conflicting opinions.

I there wi' something did foregather,
That put me in an eerie swither.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Syde, long or low, largely applied to a gown or dress.

Jeanie she gaed up the gate,
Wi' a green gown as syde as her smock,
Now, sirs, Jeanie has gotten her Jock.

—CHAMBERS'S Scottish Songs.

Syke, a ditch, a northern English word, according to Halliwell, for a gutter; probably a corruption of soak or suck. A sike, according to Jamieson, is a rill, or a marshy bottom with a small stream in it.

Through thick and thin they scoured about,

Plashing through dubs and sykes.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: *Continuation of
Christ's Kirk on the Green*.

Syne, since, time past, a time ago. (See AULD LANG SYNE, p. 3.)

Here's a health to them that were here short syne,
And canna be here the day.

JOHNSON'S Musical Museum.

T

Tabean birben, a comb; probably a side-comb for the adornment of a woman's hair. It occurs in the ancient version of the song entitled "Lord Gregory." Jamieson is of opinion that the phrase, a "tabean birben kame" means a comb made at Tabia, in Italy. "Shall we suppose," he adds, "that birben is a corruption of ivour, or ivory-bane (or bone)?" Shall we not rather suppose, as Tabia was not known as a place of manufacture for combs, that the word is of native Scotch origin, and that, uncouth as it looks, it is resolvable into the Gaelic taobh, a side; taobhan, sides; bior, a pin, a point, a prickle, the tooth of a comb; and bean, a woman, whence taobhan bior bean (corrupted into tabean birben), the side-comb of a woman?

Tack, a lease, a holding; tacksman, a leaseholder; from tack, to hold, to fasten.

Nae man has a tack o' his life.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Taigle, to tease, to perplex, to banter; from the Gaelic tea-gamh, doubt, perplexity.

Two irreverent young fellows determined to taigle the minister. Coming up to him in the High Street of Dumfries, they accosted him with much solemnity, "Maister Dunlop, hae ye heard the news?" "What news?" "Oh, the deil's dead!" "Is he?" replied Mr. Dunlop. "Then I maun pray for twa faitherless bairns."—DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

Taigle, "to tease, perplex, banter." I never heard these meanings;—taigle is to delay, to hinder—dinna taigle me—I was sair taigled the day. In the quotation from Dean Ramsay, I suspect that taigle is improperly put for tackle, or, as pronounced in Scotland, tackie, meaning to seize upon, lay hold on. In a description of a meeting of the U.P. Presbytery of Edinburgh, that had what is called the Dalkeith heresy case before it, it was stated that Dr. Peddie proceeded to tackle Mr. Ferguson upon his heretical views.—R. DRENNAN.

Tairge, or targe, to cross-question severely and rigidly; of uncertain etymology, though possibly connected with the Gaelic tagair, to plead, to argue, to dispute.

And aye on Sundays daily, nightly,
I on the questions tairge them tightly;
Till, fack, wee Davock's grown so gleg,
Though scarcely larger than my leg,
He'll screed you aff Effectual Calling
As fast as ony in the dwelling.

—BURNS: The Inventory.

I'll gie him a tairgin'.—JAMIESON.

Tait, joyous, gay; a word used by the old Scottish poet, Douglas, in his translation of the "Eneid." Jamieson derives it "from the Icelandic teitr, hilares, exultans;" but its more obvious source is the Gaelic taithe, which has the same meaning. The English exclamation of hoity-toity, or hoite cum toite, the name of a favourite dance in the reign of Charles II., is from the same Gaelic root—aite chum taite—in which aite and taite are almost synonymous, and signify joy, merriment, pleasure. Hoyt, in the sense of revelry, was used by the Elizabethan writers, Donne, Beaumont and Fletcher, and others.

Hoity-toity, whisking, frisking.

—BICKERSTAFFE: Love in a Village.

He sings and hoys and revels among his drunken companions. — BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

The modern English slang tight, applied to a person who is joyously intoxicated, or semi-intoxicated, seems to be of the same Gaelic derivation.

Taity, taitey, matted like hair, entangled. Tait (sometimes written tate and tett), a lock of matted hair.

At ilka tait o' his horse's mane

There hung a siller bell,

The wind was loud, the steed was proud,
And they gied a sindry knell.

—Ballad of Young Waters.

Her skirt was o' the grass-green silk,

Her mantle o' the ermine fine,

At ilka tett o' the horse's mane

Hung fifty siller bells and nine.

—Ballad of True Thomas.

The etymology of this word is uncertain, unless it is to be found in the Gaelic taod, a rope, a string; from the ropy, stringy appearance of hair in this condition. There is an old

Scottish song entitled "Taits o' Woo'."

Tak' tellin', take telling; a phrase that implies that a person either requires or is amenable to advice or admonition, or the reverse.

He wad na tak tellin, he would not be advised. . . . She's a clever servant in a house, but she taks tellin, i.e., she needs to be reminded of what ought to be done. — JAMIESON.

Tandle (sometimes written tawndle), a bonfire; from the Gaelic tein, fire, and deal, friendly. From the root of teine comes teind, or tynd, to kindle; and tin-egin (sometimes rendered by the Teutonic neid-fire), a fire of emergency, produced by friction of two pieces of dried wood. Neid-fire also means a beacon; possibly a misprint for "need-fire." Jamieson translates tin-egin, a force fire, but gives no etymology. Egin is from the Gaelic eigin or eiginn, force, violence, compulsion. See BELTANE, ante.

Tangle, long, tall, and feeble, not well jointed; from the Gaelic tean, long, thin, drawn out, extended; and gille, a lad; also the popular name of the long seaweed, tangle, often used in conjunction with dulse, for seaweed generally. Dean Ramsay quotes the saying of an old Scottish lady, who was lifted from the ground after a fall, happily not severe, by a very tall, young lieutenant, who addressed him when she afterwards met him—"Eh, but ye're a lang lad!"

The English tangle and entangle are words of a different meaning, and probably a corruption of the Gaelic seangal, to tie up, to fasten, to enchain, to fetter. The American phrase applied to whisky or other spirit, when indulged in too freely, of tangle-foot and tangle-footed, unable to walk steadily from intoxication, is both humorous and appropriate.

Tangleness, contradiction, confusion, dishonesty, entanglement of truth and falsehood.

Donald's the callant, that brooks nae
tangleness,
Whiggin' and priggin' and a' new fangleness,
They maun be gane, he winna be baukit,
man,
He maun hae justice, or faith he will tak
it, man.

—JAMES HOGG, the Ettrick Shepherd.

Tanterlick, a severe beating. Probably this word is derivable from the Gaelic deann (teann, see TANTRUM), or dian, fierce, hot. This, combined with lick, the English slang to beat (a good licking, a good beating), and the Gaelic leach, a stone, would signify, in the first instance, a stoning, one of the earliest methods adopted in the quarrels of boys for the conquest or punishment of an opponent.

Tantin', hard pressing, squeezing; rantin'-tantin', ranting and raving; or ranting and pressing hard upon or against, from the Gaelic teantann, a pressing, a squeezing. A minister in his Sabbath service, asked by his congregation to pray for fine weather during a long continuance of rain that threatened to be injurious to the harvest, put up the following prayer:—

"O Lord, we pray thee to send us wind, no a rantin'-tantin', tearin' wind, but a soughin' (sighing), winnin' wind." More expressive words than these could not be found in any language.—DEAN RAMSAY.

Tantrum. This word, borrowed by the English from the Scotch, is generally used in the plural; and the phrase, "to be in the tantrums," most commonly applied to a woman, signifies that she is in a violent fit of ill-temper. Jamieson explains it as "high airs," and derives it from the French tantrons, nick-nacks. This etymology cannot be accepted—firstly, because there is no such word in the French language; and secondly, because if there were, the meanings are not in the slightest degree related. The "English Slang Dictionary" derives it from a dance called, in Italy, the tarantula, because persons in the tantrums dance and caper about! The word is composed of the Gaelic deann, haste, violence, hurry; and trom, heavy, whence violent and heavy, applied to a fit of sudden passion.

Tapetless, heedless, foolish; probably from the Gaelic tapadh, activity, cleverness; and ta-paidh, quick, active, manly, bold, with the addition of the English less, want of cleverness or activity.

The tapetless, ramfeezled hizzie,
She's saft at best, and something lazy.

—BURNS: To John Lapraik.

Tap-oure-tail, top-over-tail, or topsy-turvy (erroneously printed in Jamieson tap-our-tail), has the same meaning as tapsalteerie, and the English head-over-heels.

Tappiloorie, top-heavy; or tappie-tourie, round at the top. From the Flemish, Dutch, and English top; and the Flemish and Dutch loer, French lourd, heavy; tourie, from the Flemish, toere, round about; the French tour and autour.

Tappit-hen, a crested hen, or a hen with a top tuft of feathers; a phrase applied to a large bottle or jar of wine or spirits.

Blythe, blythe, and merry was she,
Blythe was she but and ben,
Weel she loo'ed a Hawick gill,
And leuch to see a tappit-hen.

—Tea Table Miscellany: Andrew and his Cuttie Gun.

Come, bumpers high, express your joy,
The bowl we maun renew it,
The tappit-hen gae bring her ben,
To welcome Willie Stewart.

—BURNS.

Their hostess appeared with a huge pewter measuring pot, containing at least three English quarts, familiarly termed a tappit-hen.—SCOTT: Waverley.

Blithe, blithe, and merry are we,
Pick and wale o' merry men,
What care we though the cock may crow,
We're masters o' the tappit-hen.

—CHARLES GRAY: Whistle Binkie.

"This term," says Jamieson, "denoted in Aberdeen a large bottle of claret, holding three magnums or Scots pints;" but as regards the quantity opinion differs. All agree, however, that a tappit-hen held considerably more than an ordinary bottle.

Tapsalteerie, in confusion, upside down, topsy-turvy. Possibly from the Gaelic toabh, the side; and saltair, to tread, to trample. Topsy-turvy is apparently from the same source, and not from "top-side the t'other way," as some etymologists have suggested.

Gie me a cannie hour at e'en,
My arms about my dearie, O,
And warldly cares and warldly men
May a' gang tapsalteerie, O!

—BURNS.

In an excellent translation into German of Burns's "Green grow the rushes, O!" appended as a note in Chambers's "Scottish Songs," the two lines in which tapsalteerie occurs are well rendered:—

Mag Erdenvolk und Erdenplag, Kopfsüßer dann, Kopfsüßer gehen.

Taphrawn, perverse, obstinate, unreasonably argumentative; from tap, the head or brain, metaphorically the intellect; and thrawn, twisted wrongly.

Tartar. To catch a Tartar, to be overpowered in argument or in fight, by one whose prowess had been denied or unsuspected; to get the worst of it. Tartar, says the Slang Dictionary, is "a savage fellow, an ugly customer." To "catch a Tartar," is to discover, somewhat unpleasantly, that a person is by no means so mild or good tempered as was supposed.

This saying originated from the story of an Irish soldier in the imperial service, who, in a battle against the Turks, called out to his comrade that he had caught a Tartar. "Bring him along then," said he. "He won't come," said Paddy. "Then come along yourself," replied his comrade. "Bedad!" said he, "but he won't let me!" A Tartar is also an adept at any feast or game. "He is quite a tartar at cricket or billiards."—GROSE'S Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue.

Grose's story was evidently invented. Philology had no need to travel into Tartary to explain the source of a peculiarly British phrase, which has no equivalent in any language but English and Scotch: inasmuch as it is of native origin, from the Gaelic tartar, a great noise, clamour, bustle, confusion; tartarach, bustling, noisy, uproaring, unmanageable.

Tartarian is a word used by the dramatists of the Elizabethan era to signify a strong thief, or a noisy blustering villain.

Tass, a small heap of earth or cluster of flowers; from the French tas, a parcel or pack.

There lived a lass in Inverness,
She was the pride of a' the town,
Blythe as the lark on gowan tass
When frae the nest it's newly flown.
—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM.

Tatshie, according to Jamieson, signifies dressed in a slovenly manner; and tattrel, a rag.

Tatterdemalion, a ragged, miserable object. A colloquial word introduced into England by the Scotch; and supposed by English philologists to be from the Icelandic tetur, a torn garment. The roots, however, are derivable from the Gaelic; that of tatter is from dud, a rag; from whence the provincial English dud, meaning a scarecrow. Malion comes from meall and meallan, a lump, a heap of confused objects; from whence the primary meaning of tatterdemalion would seem to be a "heap of rags," applied contemptuously to the wearer of them. Mr. James M'Kie, of Kilmarnock, quotes in his Bibliography of Burns, "The Jolly Beggars, or Tatterdemalions, a cantata by Robert Burns. Edinburgh, Oliver & Boyd, 1808."

Tavern sign of the Dog and Duck. This is usually explained in the English sense of a "Dog" and a "Duck," with a representation on the sign-board of a sportsman shooting wild ducks, followed by a dog ready to spring into the water. It is probable, however, that the sign is of greater antiquity than the conquest of England by the Danes and Saxons; and that it dates from the Celtic period, and was originally Deoch an Diugh, or "Drink to-day," an invitation to all travellers and passers by to step in and drink; and that it was not by any means confined to the shooters of ducks, or to the watery districts in which such sports were possible. The perversions of the word deoch (drink), by the English and Lowland Scotch, are very numerous. One of them in particular deserves to be cited, dog's nose, which is, or used to be, a favourite drink of the populace in London, composed of beer and gin. Charles Dickens, in Pickwick, describes dog's nose as a warm drink; but the compiler of Hotten's Slang Dictionary affirms it to be a cold drink—so called, because it was "as cold as a dog's nose." The true derivation is most probably from the Gaelic deoch and nos, custom; and nosag, customary, or usual; and thus signifies the "usual drink." Another common and equally ludicrous perversion of the Gaelic is "Old Tom," which is used by the publicans of London, illustrated by a large tom-cat sitting on a barrel of gin. The origin of the phrase is ol, drink, and taom, to pour out; whence, to pour out the favourite liquor.

Tavey's locker, Davy's locker, Davy Jones's locker. These singular phrases, used principally among sailors, all signify death simply, or death by drowning in the sea. Their origin has never been very satisfactorily explained or accounted for; and no one has yet told the world whether Tavey or Davy was a real or a fabulous person, or who Jones was, and what was signified by his locker. The Teutonic roots of the English and Scotch languages fail to give the slightest hint or clue to the etymology of the expression, and thus compel inquirers to look to the Celtic for a possible solution of the mystery. In Gaelic is found tainh (taiv or taif), death; and tamh (taiv), the ocean; ionadh, a place; and lochd, sleep, or a closing of the eyes. Tainh or tamh may account for the corruption into Tavey or Davy, ionadh for Jones, and lochd for locker. This explanation supplies an intelligible and appropriate meaning to Davy Jones's locker, the grotesque combination of words in Scotch and English which has become proverbial among seafaring people.

According to Wright's "Provincial English Dictionary," David Jones is a name given by sailors to a "sea-devil." But whether the "sea-devil" had or had not a locker we are not informed. Nares, in his Glossary, says that one "Davy" was a proficient in sword and buckler exercise, celebrated at the close of the sixteenth century. It does not appear, however, that any of these allusions can shed any light on the origin of Davy's locker.

Tawdy, a term of contempt for a child; tawdy-fee, a fine for illegitimacy; also, a depreciatory epithet for the podex. The etymology is unknown, but may be connected with the Gaelic todhar, excrement, and, by extension of meaning, to the senses in which it is applied to the podex, or to a child. Todhar also signifies a field manured by folding cattle upon it. Taudis, in French, signifies a miserable and dirty hole or hovel. In Irish Gaelic, tod or todan signifies a lump, a clod, a round mass, which may also have some remote connection with the idea of the podex.

Tawie, tame, peaceable, friendly, easily led. Gaelic taobhach (tao-vach), friendly, partial, inclined to kindness; erroneously derived from tow, a rope, or to be led by a rope.

Hamely, tawie, quiet, cannie,
An' unco sonsie.

—BURNS: Auld Farmer's Address.

Tawpie, a foolish person, especially a foolish girl.

Gawkies, tawpies, gowks and fools.

—BURNS: Verses Written at Selkirk.

This word is usually derived from the French tavpe, a mole—erroneously supposed to be blind; but the Gaelic origin is more probable, from taip, a lump, a lumpish or clumsy person.

Dans le royaume des taupes, les borgnes sont rois.—French Proverb.

Teen, tene, teyne, provocation, anger, wrath, From the Gaelic teine, fire; teintidh, fiery, angry.

Last day I grat wi' spite and teen,

As poet Burns cam' by:

That to a bard I should be seen,

Wi' half my channel dry.

—BURNS: Humble Petition of Bruar Water.

Teethie, crabbed, ill-natured, snarling; applied metaphorically from the action of a dog which shows its teeth when threatening to bite. The English word toothsome, which has no relation in meaning to teethie, is often used instead of dainty, from the erroneous idea that dainty is derived from dens, a tooth. The real derivation of dainty is from the Gaelic deanta, complete, perfect, well formed, and finished. When Shakspeare speaks of his "dainty Ariel," or a man praises the dainty hand or lips of his beloved, he does not mean that the teeth should be employed upon them, but that they are well-formed, complete, or beautifully perfect.

Teind, a tax, a tribute, a tithe, a tenth; teind-free, exempt from tithes or taxation.

But we that live in Fairy Land

No sickness know, nor pain,

I quit my body when I will,

And take to it again;

And I would never tire, Janet,

In Elfin land to dwell;

But aye at every seven years' end,
They pay the tend to hell;
And I'm sae fat and fair of flesh,
I fear 'twill be mysel.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Young Tamlane.

The time flew by wi' tentless heed,
Till 'twixt the late and early,
Wi' sma' persuasion she agreed
To see me through the barley.

—BURNS: Corn Rigs and Barley Rigs.

See ye take tent to this!

—BEN JONSON: Sad Shepherdess.

Tendal knife. Jamieson cites from an inventory, "two belts, a tendal knife, a horse comb, and a burning iron;" and at a loss to account for the word, asks: "Shall we suppose that knives celebrated for their temper had been formerly made somewhere in the dale, or valley of Tyne, in England? It might, however, be the name of the maker?" These are, no doubt, ingenious suppositions, but both appear to be wrong if tested by the Gaelic, in which tean signifies long and thin; and tail, or taile, strong; whence tendal knife, a knife with a long, thin, strong blade.

Tent, to take heed, to act cautiously and warily, to be attentive. From the French tenter, to try, to attempt. Tentie, cautious, wary; to tak tent, to take care, to beware; tentless, careless.

When the tod preaches tak tent o' the lambs.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: Scots Proverbs.

But warily tent when ye come to court me,
And come na unless the back yett be aje.
Syne up the back stair and let naebod see,
And come as ye were na comin' to me.

—BURNS: Oh Whistle and I'll come to you, my Lad.

I rede you, honest man, tak tent,
Ye'll show your folly.

—BURNS: Epistle to James Smith.

Teribus ye teri odin, the war cry of the men of Hawick at the battle of Flodden, and still preserved in the traditions of the town. The full chorus is often sung at festive gatherings, not only in the gallant old border town itself, but in the remotest districts of Canada, the United States, and Australia, wherever Hawick men and natives of the Scottish Border congregate to keep up the remembrance of their native land, and the haunts of their boyhood.

Teribus ye teri odin,
Sons of heroes slain at Flodden,
Imitating Border bowmen,
Aye defend your rights and common.

Attempts have been frequently made to connect this Border ballad with the names of the Scandinavian and Norse demigods, Thor and Odin; but these heroes were wholly unknown to the original possessors of the Scottish soil, and but very partially known to the Danish and Saxon invaders, who came after them. The ballad, of which these mysterious words form the burden, is one of patriotic "defence and defiance" against the invaders of the soil. Teribus ye teri odin is an attempt at a phonetic rendering of the Gaelic

Tir a buaidh's, tir a dion, which, translated, means "Land of victory, and Land of defence."

Teth, spirit, mettle, humour, temper, disposition; usually employed in the sense of high-spirited. The word was English in the Elizabethan era, and was pronounced and written tith, from the Gaelic teth, hot.

She's good mettle, of a good stirring strain, and goes tith.—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

Take a widow—a good staunch wench that's tith.—Idem.

Ill-teth'd, ill-humoured.—JAMIESON.

Teuch, a drink, a draught of liquor. This word has been derived by Jamieson and others from the Teutonic tog, and teughe, to draw or pull. As no such words are to be found in the Teutonic languages, it is possible that Jamieson meant the German zug, the English tug, to pull or draw; whence, in vulgar language, a long pull at the bottle or tankard, a deep draught. It seems more probable, however, that the Lowland Scotch word is a corruption of the Gaelic deoch, a drink, as in the phrase, "deoch an' doruis," a drink at the door, a stirrup cup. (See DEUK, ante, p. 42.)

Tevoo. This nearly obsolete word was formerly used by women in contemptuous depreciation of a male flirt, fond of their society, but who was never serious in his attentions to them.

It has been supposed to be somehow or other derived from the French, but no word similar to it appears in that language. It is probably from the Gaelic ti, a person, a creature; and fu, an abbreviation of fuachaidh, a flirt, a jilt, a deceiver.

Tew is a word of many meanings in Scotland, but most commonly signifies to work hard. It also signifies to struggle, to strive, to fatigue, to overpower, to make tough. "Sair teus" signifies old or sore difficulties or troubles; tewing on, toiling on; sair teved, greatly fatigued, are common expressions. Jamieson derives the word from the French tuer, to kill; Nares cites instances in which it is used in the sense of tow, to pull along by a rope. Possibly, however, it is but a misspelling of the Scottish teuch (with the omission of the guttural j, the English tough, in which the omitted guttural is replaced by the sound of f, as tuff). The Gaelic tiugh, thick, stiff, strong, is doubtless an allied word.

Thack and raip, from the thatch of a house; and rope, the binding or fastening which keeps the thatch in its place. Hence, metaphorically, the phrase applied to the conduct of an unreasonable and disorderly person, that he acts "out of a' thack and raip," as if the roof of his house were uncovered, and let in the wind and weather; or, in vulgar slang, as if he had

"a slate or a tile loose."

Thairms, the strings of a violin, harp, or other instrument for which wire is not used, called in England cat-gut. The word is derived from the German, Dutch, and Flemish darm, gut, intestines; the German plural därme.

Oh, had M'Lachlan, thairm-inspiring sage,
Been there to hear this heavenly band engage.

—BURNS: The Brigs of Ayr.

Come, screw the pegs wi' tunefu' cheep,
And ower the thairms be trying.

—BURNS: The Ordination.

The word, though immediately derived from the Teutonic, may, in the sense of gut or entrails, have some connection with the practice of divination by the ancient Augurs, who studied the intestines of sacrificed birds to foretell future events. But this is a mere conjecture founded upon the fact, that the Gaelic tairm, or thairm, signifies divination.

From thairm, string made from gut, may probably come the Scottish words thrum, to play on a stringed instrument, and, in a contemptuous sense, thrummer, an inferior fiddler. Possibly the English strum is a corruption and euphemism of thrum.

Thane, a very ancient title of nobility in Scotland, equivalent in rank to an English earl. Macbeth, according to Shakspeare, was Thane of Cawdor. Jamieson suggests its derivation from the Anglo-Saxon thegn, a servant; but as the title was peculiar to the Gael, wholly unknown to the Saxon, and implied rather mastery and dominion than servitude, a Celtic etymology is most probable; that etymology is found in tanaistear, a governor, a lord, a prince; one second in rank to the king or sovereign; and tanaisteach, governing, acting as a thane, or master.

The noo, or the now, a common Scotticism for just now, immediately, presently, by and by.

Theak, theeck, to thatch a house. Greek θηκη (thêkê), a small house, a repository; German dach, a roof; old English theccan, to cover; Gaelic tigh and teach, a house.

Bessie Bell and Mary Gray,

They were twa bonnie lasses,
They biggit a bower on yon burn brae,
And theekit it o'er wi' rushes.

—Ballad: Bessie Bell and Mary Gray.

Ye'll sit on his white hause bane,
And I'll pike out his bonnie blue een;
Wi' ae lock o' his gowden hair
We'll theek our nest when it grows bare.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border:
The Two Corbies.

The cozy roof theekit wi' moss-covered strae.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Them, they, those. These plural pronouns are often used in Scotland instead of the singular it, especially when applied to oatmeal porridge, brose, hotch-potch, and broth, or soup. The idea of plurality seems to be attached to porridge, from the multiplicity of the grains of meal, of which the dish is compounded, and to hotch-potch, barley broth, and other soups, for the same reason of their numerous ingredients.

Why dinna ye sup ye're parritch, Johnnie?
Johnnie—I dinna like them.

—GALT.

Once at the annual dinner to his tenants, given by the Duke of Buccleuch, the Duchess pressed a burly old farmer, to whom she wished to show attention, to partake of some pea-soup. "Muckle obleeged to your Grace," said the farmer, "but I downa tak' them. They're owre wundy!"—The Ettrick Shepherd.

Each true-hearted Scotsman, by nature
jocose,

Can cheerfully dine on a dishfu' o' brose,
And the grace be a wish to get plenty of those;

And it's O for the kail brose o' Scotland,
And O for the Scottish kail brose.

—ALEXANDER WATSON: Old Song.

Then-a-days, in former time, as opposed to the English and Scottish phrase, now-a-days, in the present time.

Theses, gooseberries, or more properly gorse or thorn berries; in Dutch and Flemish doorn, or thorn-berries. Mr. Halliwell, in his Archaic Dictionary, cites theses as an Eastern Counties word, used in Sir Thomas Brown's works. It is also current in the Lowlands of Scotland. The derivation is unknown.

Thetes, traces or harness of a horse drawing a vehicle. To be "out of the traces," is to be out of rule, governance, or control.

To be quite out of the thetes, i.e., to be disorderly in one's conduct. . . . To be out of thete is a phrase applied to one who is rusted as to any art or science from want of practice.—JAMIESON.

The word is derived by Jamieson from the Icelandic thatt'r, a cord, a small rope; but is more probably from the Gaelic taod; aspirated thoad, a rope.

Thief-like, ugly, disagreeable. This Scottish phrase does not signify dishonest-looking, but simply repulsive, or disagreeable; possibly because the Lowland Scotch who made use of it suffered but too often from the incursions of the Highland cattle-stealers into the pastures and sheep-folds, associated in their minds with all that was most offensive, morally and physically.

That's a thief-like mutch ye have on,
i.e., that's an ugly cap you have on.—
JAMIESON.

Thief-like occurs in two common proverbial phrases—the thief-like the better soldier; the aulder the thief-like. Ye're like the horse's bains, the aulder ye grow the thief-like.—JAMIESON.

Thig, to beg or borrow; sometimes written thigger.

The father buys, the son biggs (builds),
The oye (grandson) sells, and his son thigs.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

And if the wives and dirty brats,
E'en thigger at your doors an' yetts.

—BURNS: Address of Beelzebub.

Think-lang, to grow weary, to be impatient of another's absence ; to think the time long.

But think na' lang, lassie, tho' I gang awa',
The summer is comin', cauld winter's awa',
And I'll come back and see thee in spite
o' them a'.

—Song: Legie o' Buchan.

Thistlecock or thrushcock, the thrush, more poetically called the mavis, both in Old English and Scottish poetry.

The primrose is the fairest flower
That springs on muir or dale ;
An' the thistlecock is the bonniest bird
That sings on the evening gale.

—Ballad of Proud Lady Margaret.

Thivel, a cudgel, a large shillelagh. Etymology unknown.

An' for a thivel they did use
A sturdy stump o' knotty spruce.

—John o' Arnha'.

Tholeable, tholesome, tolerable, that may be endured ; tholance, sufferance, endurance. Thole is doubtless from the same root as the Latin tolerare, and the Gaelic dolas, sufferance, dolour, pain.

Thowless. Perhaps a corruption of thowless, weak ; without thews and sinews. Gaelic tiugh, thick, strong ; whence thowless, without strength or thickness.

For fortune aye favours the active and bald,
But ruins the wooer that's thowless and cauld.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Her dowff excuses pat me mad,
Conscience—says I, ye thowless jad,
I'll write, and that a hearty blaud
This very night.

—BURNS: Epistle to Lapraik.

Thrairie. According to Jamieson, this word signifies to be constantly harping on one subject, and is derived from the Teutonic or Swedish traegen, assiduous. He is of opinion also that rane, to cry the same thing over and over again, is synonymous, and of the same origin. But more probably, in the sense of harping continually on one subject, of complaint, thrairie is from the Greek threnos, a lamentation. Rane is probably from the Gaelic ran, to roar.

Thram, to thrive, to prosper. Etymology uncertain. Jamieson supposes it to be from the Icelandic.

Well wat your honour, thram for that, quo' she.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

Can you expect to thram,
That hae been guilty o' so great a wrang?

—Ibid.

Thrang, busy, crowded with work or occupation ; from the English throng, to crowd, and the German drang, pressure, drängen, to press, and the Flemish dringen, to press, to squeeze.

Upon a bonnie day in June,
When wearin' through the afternoon,
Twa dogs that were nae thrang at hame,
Foregathered ance upon a time.

—BURNS: The Twa Dogs.

The deil sat grim among the reek,
Thrang bundling brimstone matches!
 —Jacobite Song: Awa', ye Whigs,
Awa'.

Thrapple, the throat; akin to the English throttle.

As murder at his thrapple shored;
 And hell mixed in the brulzie [broil].
 —BURNS: Epistle to Robert Graham.

When we had a Scots Parliament,—deil rax their thrapples that reft us o't.
 SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Thraw, a twist, a fit of ill-humour; thrawn, twisted, contorted. Thrawn-gabbit, with a twisted or contorted gab, or mouth; and, metaphorically, a cantankerous, morose person who is always grumbling. Gabbit is from the Gaelic gab, a mouth; whence the English slang, "the gift of the gab," the gift of eloquence, or power of much speaking. Thrawart, perverse, obstinate; thraw, to contradict; thraus, throes, twists or contortions of pain; also, a little while, or a turn of time, a twist.

She turns the key wi' cannie thraw.
 —BURNS: Hallowe'en.

When I a little thraw had made my moan,
 Bewailing mine misfortune and mischance.
 —The King's Quair.

There are twa hens into the crib,
 Have fed this mouth and mair;
 Make haste and thraw their necks about,
 That Colin weel may fare.
 —MICKLE: There's nae Luck About the House.

He's easy wi' a' body that's easy wi' him; but if ye thraw him, ye had better thraw the deevil.—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Thraw seems akin to the English throe, a throb, a twist of pain, and is probably from the Teutonic.

Threpe, or threap, to argue, to contend pertinaciously in argument, to assert obstinately in spite of reason; from the Gaelic drip, or trip, to contend, to fight.

It's not for a man with a woman to threap,
 Unless he first give ower the plea:
 As we began we'll now leave off—
 I'll tak my auld cloak about me.

—Old Ballad, quoted by SHAKESPEARE.
 Some herds, weel learned upon the beuk,
 Wad threap auld folk the thing mistook.
 —BURNS: Epistle to Simpson.

Threapin's no' provin'.
 —ALLAN RAMSAY.

This is na threapin' ware [i.e., this is genuine ware, not to be argued about].—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Thrimle, thrimmel, to press, to squeeze; thrimp, thrupp, to press as in a crowd, to push. Etymology uncertain, but possibly from the Flemish drempele, an entrance—whence to force an entrance, to press through, to push through.

Through. This word, the Gaelic troimh, the Kymric trw, and the Teutonic durch, enters more largely into its structure of Scottish compound terms and phrases, than was ever the case in England. Thus the Scotch have through-gang, perseverance; through-gaun, and through-gang-ing, persevering, also waste-ful, prodigal, going through one's means; through-pit, activity, energy, that puts a thing through; through-fare, or through-gang, a thoroughfare; through-ither, confused; through-stone, a stone as thick as the wall; through-pittin', or through-bearin', a bare subsistence, enough to get through the world with; and the verb to through, or thru, to penetrate, to go through. Sir Walter Scott uses through-gaun in Rob Roy, in the sense of a severe exposure of one's life and conduct, during a rigid cross-examination.

Throwther, higgledy-piggledy, helter-skelter, in confusion; possibly a corruption of through-ither, or through-each-other.

Till—skelp—a shot! they're aff a' throwther,

To save their skin.

—BURNS: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

Thrum, a musical sound, also a thread. Gray thrums, the popular phrase in Scotland for the purring of a cat, the sound of a spinning-wheel, the thread remaining at the end of a web; apparently derived from the Gaelic troimh, through.

Come out wi' your moolins, come out wi'
your crumbs,
And keep in slee baudrons [the cat] to sing ye gray thrums.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: A Voice from the Woods.

Thud, a dull, heavy blow: etymology unknown. Lord Neaves considered it a comic word, though it is difficult to see why, especially when such serious use of it was made by Gawin Douglas and Allan Ramsay:—

The fearful thuds of the tempestuous tide.

—GAWIN DOUGLAS: Translation of the Enid.

The air grew rough with boisterous thuds.

ALLAN RAMSAY: The Vision.

Swi

th on a hardened clay he fell,
Right far was heard the thud.

—Hardyknute.

Tid, tid-bit, tydy. All these words, like the English tide, are derivable from the idea of time, the German zeit, the Dutch and Flemish tijd. Tid, in the Scottish language, signifies season; the English tid-bit is a seasonable bit. Bit is from the Gaelic biadh, food, and not from the English bite, or that which is bitten. The French morceau, the English morsel, is unquestionably derived from mordre, to bite. Tydy, seasonable; "a tydy bride" is a phrase applied to an unmarried girl who is about to become a mother, and in that state is married and taken home to her bridegroom's house, in order that the coming child may be born after wedlock, and thus become legitimated.

Tift, English tiff, a slight quarrel, a fit of ill-humour; tip, a slang word for money given to a servant as a small gratuity to procure drink or otherwise; called by the French a pour boire, and by the Germans trink- geld. No English or Scottish etymologist has succeeded in tracing these words to their sources. Jamieson derives tift from the Icelandic tyfta, to chastise; Johnson declares tiff, a quarrel, to be "a low word, without etymology;" Richardson has tiff, a drink, which he thinks a corruption of tipple, an allied word; Ash defines tiff to be a corruption of the Teutonic tepel, a dug or teat, while the ancient author of "Gazophylacium Anglicanum" surpasses all his predecessors and successors in ingenuity by deriving tipsy and tipple from the Latin tipula, a water-spider, because that insect is always drinking! Mr. Halliwell, without entering on the etymological question, says that in English provincial dialects tiff has three meanings—small beer, a draught of any liquor, and to fall headlong from the effects of drink.

There are several derivatives in the Scottish language from tift, a quarrel, viz., tifty, quarrelsome, apt to take offence; tifting, an angry scolding; and "to be in a tifter," i.e., in a difficult and disagreeable position where one is likely to be severely reprimanded. Possibly the Scottish tift (a quarrel), the English tiff (a fit of ill-humour), are as closely allied in meaning as they are in sound.

Tig, a twitch, a touch, a sharp stroke; also a slight fit of ill-temper; possibly, in both senses, derived from the Gaelic taoig, anger, and taoigeach, angry, and as such disposed to strike a blow.

A game among children. He who in this game gives the stroke, says to the person to whom he has given it, "Ye bear my tig."—JAMIESON.

Tillie-soul. According to Jamieson, this word signifies "a place to which a gentleman sends the horses and servants of his guests, when he does not choose to entertain them at his own expense." He derives it from the French tillet, a ticket; and solde, pay. There is, however, no such word as tillet, a ticket, in the French language. There is tiller, which means, "détacher avec la main les filaments du chanvre," i.e., to remove with the hand the filaments of hemp. But this operation has certainly nothing to do with the explanation given to tillie-soul. The true derivation appears to be from the Gaelic till, to turn away; and sult, feeding, fatness, good bodily entertainment; whence tillie-soul or till sult, to turn away for entertainment elsewhere.

Timmer, timber; from the Flemish timmer. This word is used not alone as signifying wood, but in the sense of building or constructing out of wood; and, by extension of meaning, into constructing or fashioning generally; and, by still wider extension, into doing or performing. "To give one a timmerin'" signifies to beat one with a stick (or piece of timber). Timmer-breeks and timmer-sark were ludicrous terms for a coffin. Timmerman, in the Flemish, and zimmerman, in the German, signified a carpenter, an artificer in wood, and also a woodmonger, or woodman.

Timmer up the flail, i.e., to wield the flail; timmer up the floor with a dishclout, i.e., to clean it. . . . To timmer up the lesson, i.e., to be busily employed in learning. . . . Oh, as he timmers up the Latin! i.e., what a deal of Latin he employs.—JAMIESON.

And who in singing could excel
Famed Douglas, Bishop of Dunkel';
He timmer'd up, though it be lang,
In gude braid Scots a Virgil's sang.
—INGRAM'S Poems.

Tine, to lose; tint, lost. This ancient English word has long been confined to Scottish literature and parlance.

What was tint through tree,
Tree shall it win.

—Piers Ploughman.

He never tint a cow that grat for a needle.

Where there is nothing the king tines his right.

All's not tint that's in danger.

Better spoil your joke than tine your friend.

Tine heart—all's gone.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scotts Proverbs.

Next my heart I'll wear her,
For fear my jewel tine.—BURNS.

Tinkle-sweetie. According to Jamieson, tinkle-sweetie was a name formerly given in Edinburgh to a bell that was rung at eight o'clock in the evening. A previous bell, which was rung at two in the afternoon, was called the "kail bell," i.e., the dinner bell. Tinkle-sweetie was superseded as a phrase by the "aucht hour bell." Jamieson, at a loss for the etymology, says "it was thus denominated because the sound of it was sweet to the ears of apprentices and shopmen, because they were then at liberty to shut up for the night." The conjecture is no doubt ingenious; but it may be asked whether the kail or dinner bell might not have been as justly entitled to be called sweet as the bell that announced the cessation of labour? The word is apparently a relic of the very old time when the kings and nobles of Scotland and the merchants of Edinburgh all spoke or understood Gaelic. In that language diun (d pronounced as t) signified to shut up, to close; glaoth (pronounced glao) signified a cry, a call; and suaiteachd, labour, work, toil; whence duinglao (tuinglao, quasi tinkle) and suaiteachd corrupted into sweetie. Thus the phrase would mean a call or summons, to cease from labour, or, in modern parlance, "to shut up shop."

Tinsel, loss; from tine, to lose.

My profit is not your tinsel.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scotts Proverbs.

Tippenny, from twopence; whence tippenny, at the price of two pence; twopenny ale.

Wt' tippenny we'll fear nae evil,
Wi' usquebae we'll face the devil.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Mr. Loève Weimaurs, a once noted French author, who translated or paraphrased Burns into French, rendered the first of these lines by "Avec deux sous, nous ne craignons rien," with twopence we'll fear nothing, thus leaving the ale out of the question.

Tirl, to turn the knob, the pin, or other fastening of a door. The word is of constant occurrence in the ballad poetry of Scotland.

Oh he's gone round and round about
And tirled at the pin.

—WILLIE AND MAY MARGARET.

Tirl, to spin round as in a whirlwind, to unroof with a high wind.

Whyles, on the strong-winged tempest flying.

Tirling the kirks.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

This word has been supposed to be a corruption of the English twirl, to turn round; and, by extension of meaning, "tirling the roof of the kirk," i.e., sending the materials whirling or twirling in the storm. To tirl the pin or knob of a door, is doubtless from twirl, in the English sense; but to tirl the roof of a kirk, as in the line of Burns, is more probably from the Gaelic tuirl, and tuirlin, to rush rapidly with a great noise.

Tirlie-wirlie, intricate or trifling ornaments.

Queer, tirlie-wirlie holes that gang out to the open air, and keep the air as caller as a kail-blade.—SCOTT: The Antiquary.

It was in and through the window broads
And a' the tirlie-wirlies o't,
The sweetest kiss that e'er I got
Was frae my Dainty Davie.

—HERD'S Collection: Dainty Davie.

From the English twirl and whirl, though Jamieson goes to the Swedish in search of the etymology.

Tirr, a fractious child; tirran, one of a perverse and complaining humour; tirrie, querulous, peevish. These words seem all to be derived from the Gaelic tuir, to moan, to lament, to weep; and tuireadh, moaning, complaining, lamentation. Jamieson, however, derives tirr from the Greek tyrannos, a tyrant, or the Teutonic terghen, to irritate; though the latter word is not to be found in German or in any of its dialects. Tire lire is often used in French poetry for the song or lament of the nightingale.

Tittie, a sister.

He had a wee tittie that loved na me Because I was true and trim as she

—LADY GRIZZEL BAILLIE.

Tittie-billie, according to Jamieson, who denounces it as vulgar.

This phrase signifies an equal, a match, as in the proverbial saying which he quotes, "Tam's a great thief, but Willie's tittie-billie wi' him;" and derives it from tittie, a sister; and billie, a brother. The true meaning of billie is a fellow; from the Gaelic balaoch, a mate, or close companion; and tittie, in all probability, is a corruption of taite, joyousness, jolliness. Tittie-billie would thus be synonymous with the English phrase, "a jolly good fellow." (See BILLIES, ante, page 8.)

Tocher, a dowry, but principally used as applicable to the fortunes of persons in the middle and lower ranks of life, who are too poor to give their daughters dowries. A tocher may be either a large or a small one. There is no other Scotch word for a daughter's portion. Tocherless, fortuneless.

A cow and a calf,
An ox and a half,
Forty good shillings and three;
Is not that enough tocher
For a shoemaker's daughter?

—J. O. HALLIWELL: Nursery Rhymes of England.

The bonnie lass tocherless has mair woovers than chances of a husband.

The greatest tochers make not ever the greatest testaments.

Marry a beggar and get a louse for your tocher.

Maidens' tochers and ministers' stipends are aye less than they are ca'd.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Oh meikle thinks my love o' my beauty,
And meikle thinks my love o' my kin,

But little thinks my love I ken brawly,
My tocher's the jewel has charms for him.
—BURNS.

Philologists are at variance as to the origin of tocher, which is purely Scottish, and has no relation to any similar word in the Teutonic or in the Romance languages of Europe. The French has dot, the German braut-schatz (bridal treasure), and the Dutch and Flemish bruid schat. Dr. Adolphus Wagner, editor of a German edition of Burns (Leipzig, 1825), suggests "the Icelandic tochar," which he thinks is either corrupted from the Latin douarium, or from daughter, the German tochter, or the Greek θυγατηρ. The real root of the word is the Gaelic tacar or tocar, provision or store, a marriage portion; tocharachd, well or plentifully dowered; toic, wealth, fortune; toic ard, high fortune; and toic-each, rich.

Tod, usually considered to signify a bush; ivy tod, a bush or bunch of ivy. The derivation seems to be from the Dutch and Flemish tod, a rag, a fringe; and the Gaelic dud, a rag; or taod, a string; from the string-like and ragged appearance of ivy when it has grown as high as possible on the supporting tree or wall, and has then fallen downwards. Tod also signifies a fox; tod-laurie is a jocose word for the same animal.

Ye're like the tod; ye grow grey before you grow guid.

The tod ne'er sped better than when he gaed on his ain errand.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The King rose up, wiped his eyes, and calling, "Toddlaurie, come out o' your den [Fox, come out of your hole]," he produced from behind the arras the length of Richie Moniplies, still laughing in unrestrained mirth. — SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel.

Toddy, a mixture of whisky with hot water and sugar. It has been generally supposed that the name was introduced into Scotland by some retired East Indian, from toddy, a juice extracted from various species of palm trees, especially from the cocos nocifera, which, when fermented and distilled, was known as arrack. But this is doubtful. In Allan Ramsay's poem of "The Morning Interview," published in 1721, occurs a description of a sumptuous entertainment or tea-party, in which it is said "that all the rich requisites are brought from far; the table from Japan, the tea from China, the sugar from Amazonia, or the West Indies; but that

Scotia does no such costly tribute bring,
Only some kettles full of Todian spring."

To this passage Allan Ramsay himself appended the note—"The Todian spring, i.e., Tod's well, which supplies Edinburgh with water." Tod's well and St. Anthony's well, on the side of Arthur's seat, were two of the wells which very scantily supplied the wants of Edinburgh; and when it is borne in mind that whiskey (see that word) derives its name from water, it is highly probable that Toddy in like manner was a facetious term for the pure element. The late Robert Chambers, when this etymology was first propounded to him by the present writer, rejected the idea, but afterwards adopted it on the strength of Allan Ramsay's poem.

Tol-lol, a slang expression, common to Scotland and England, as a reply to an inquiry after one's health. "How are you?" "Oh, tol-lol!" i.e., pretty well. The word is usually supposed to be a corruption of tolerable, or tolerably well. Perhaps it comes more probably from the Gaelic toileil, substantial, solid, sound, in good condition.

Toman or tommack, a small hill, a hillock, a mound of earth; from the Gaelic tom, a hill. This primitive monosyllable is widely spread over all the languages of Western Europe, and enters into the composition of numberless words that imply the sense of swelling above the surface; as in the Latin tumulus, a mound of earth that marks a grave; the English tomb, the French tombeau, the Keltic and Kymric tom, a mound, a heap; the Latin tumor, tumefaction, a pimple, a swelling of the flesh; tumescere, to swell up; the English and French dome, the Italian duomo, the German, Dutch, and Flemish dom, the Latin and Greek doma, the rounded roof or cupola, swelling over a church or cathedral, and also the cathedral itself; as "il duomo" at Milan, and the "Dom kirke" at Cologne. Tom, in the secondary sense, signifies large, from the primary idea of that which is swollen; a tom cat is a large cat; tom noddy is a great noddy or simpleton; tom fool is a great fool; and tom-boy, when applied as a reproach to a romping or noisy girl, signifies that she acts more like a great boy than like a girl.

Singing a song to the Queen o' the Fairies, among the tomans o' the ancient woods.—Noctes Ambrosiana.

Tongue-ferdy, glib of tongue, loquacious, over ready of speech. From the German zung, Flemish and Dutch tong, the tongue; and fertig, ready.

Tongue-tackit, tongue-tied, either from natural impediment, or from nervous timidity and inability to speak when there is occasion to declare one's self; also, undue reticence, when there is a necessity for speaking out.

Toom or tume, empty, poured out; from the Gaelic taom, to pour out, the English teem, to produce, to pour out progeny. Toom-handit, empty-handed; toom-headit, brainless, empty-headed; a toom pock, an empty purse. The word is used in Lancashire, according to Tim Bobbin's Glossary.

Better a toom house than an ill tenant.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Scotland greetin' owre her thrissle,
Her mutchkin stoup as toom's a whistle.

—BURNS: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

Mr. Clark of Dalreoch, whose head was vastly disproportioned to his body, met Mr. Dunlop one day. "Weel, Mr. Clark, that's a great head o' yours." "Indeed, it is, Mr. Dunlop; I could contain yours inside o' my own." "Just so," echoed Mr. Dunlop, "I was e'en thinking it was gey an toom."—DEAN RAMSAY.

On being called upon to give his vote in the choice of a chaplain to the prison of Dunfermline, David Dewar signified his assent to the election of the candidate recommended by the Board, by saying, "Weel, I've no objection to the man, for I understand that he has preached a kirk toom already; and if he be as successful in the jail, he'll maybe preach it vacant as weel."—DEAN RAMSAY.

A toom pouch makes a sair heart. But why should it? Surely a heart's worth mair than a pouch, whether it's toom or brimming ower?—DONALD CARGILL.

"Set on them, lads!" quo' Willie, then,
"Fie, lads! set on them cruellie,
For ere they win to the Ritterford Mony a toom saddle there sall be."

—JAMES TELFER: Border Minstrelsy.

Toot, or tout, to noise a thing abroad, to spread a rumour or a scandal; also, to blow a horn.

It was tootit through a' the country.
... The kintra claiks were tootit far and wide.—JAMIESON.

But now the Lord's ain trumpet touts,
I'll a' the hills are rainin'.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

An auld tout in a new horn.

Every man can tout best on his ain horn.
It's ill making a touting horn of a tod's tail.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

In English slang, a tout is one stationed outside of a shop or place of amusement, to entice people to enter; metaphorical for blowing the trumpet, i.e., praising the goods, or entertainment, to be had within. From the Gaelic dud, a trumpet; dudair, a trumpeter. The Germans call the bagpipe a dudel-sack, i.e., a trumpet sack.

Toothills—or hills where in early times a horn was blown to give warning of danger—are frequently mentioned in old records, and the name still subsists. Tothill or Toothill Fields in London was so called from an eminence of the kind in the borough of Southwark.

Tory, a word of contemptuous anger for a child, equivalent to brat. Jamieson cites it as an Ayrshire expression—"Get out of my sight, ye vile little tory." It is obvious that the word has no political origin, and is possibly from the Gaelic torrach, pregnant, and toradh (dh silent), the fruit or produce of pregnancy, i.e., a child.

Tosh, neat, trim, cozy, comfortable; toshach, a neat, tidy-looking girl; tossie, warm and snug,—almost synonymous with cozie. Of uncertain etymology. Jamieson derives it from the Flemish dossen, to dress, to adorn; but the Gaelic offers dos, a bush, a thicket, a bield, a shelter, which has become slang among English tramps and vagrants, to signify a lodging. It is possible that the idea of comfortable shelter, in the sense of the proverb, "Better a wee bush than nae bield," lies at the root of tosh and tozie.

She works her ain stockings, and spins her ain cleedin',
And keeps herself tosh frae the tap to the tae.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: Auld Janet.

Tot, a fondling name for a child that is learning to walk; from whence tottle, and toddle, to walk with slow, feeble, and uncertain step. From the Gaelic tuit, to fall. (See TOTUM.)

Tottie, warm, snug, comfortable. From the Gaelic teth, warmth; teodh, to warm; and teodhaichte, warmed; whence also tottle, to boil, or the bubbling noise made by boiling liquids.

Totum, a term of affection for a child just beginning to walk, and sometimes falling in the process; from the Gaelic tuit, to fall. From the same root comes the name of the spinning and falling toy, the tectotum; and English tot, a child.

Twa-three toddlin' weans they hae,

The pride o' a' Strabogie;

Whene'er the totums cry for meat,

She curses aye his cogie.

—Song: There's Cauld Kail in Aberdeen.

The Scotch have carried the word totum with them to the United States. It occurs in a ridiculous rhyme concerning the negroes—

De Lord He lub de nigger well,
He know de nigger by um smell;
And when de nigger totums cry,
De Lord He gib 'em possum pie.

The English word teetotum, is a child's toy, or kind of top to be twisted round by the fingers and spun on a table. Stor-month's Dictionary defines it, in addition to its ordinary use as a toy, to mean "any small thing in contempt," and suggests that the word is probably imitative of its unsteady movements when nearly spent. Tee-totum is an amplification of the Gaelic, from its tendency to fall; tuiteam, let me fall.

Toun's Bairn, a name affectionately applied to the native of a town or city, after he has risen to distinction and established a claim to the respect of the inhabitants.

Toustie, quarrelsome, irascible, contentious, twisty. From the Gaelic tuas, and tuasaid, a quarrel; tuasaidheach, quarrelsome.

Mr. Treddles was a wee toustie, when you rubbed him against the hair, but a kind, weel-meaning man.—SCOTT: Chronicles of the Canongate.

Touttie, totey, irritable, irascible, of capricious and uncertain temper. Derived by Jamieson from the Flemish toytig, windy, a word which is not to be found in the Dutch or Flemish dictionaries.

Tove, to associate kindly as friends or lovers; to "love and crack," to hold amorous or friendly discourse. Tovie, comfortable; a tovie fire, a snug, cozy, or comfortable fire. From the Gaelic taobh (pronounced taov), a side, a liking, partiality, friendship; taobhach, kindly, friendly. Tovie is an epithet sometimes used to signify that a man is garrulously drunk.

Tow, a rope, also the hemp of which ropes are made; to pull by a rope. Towing-path by a canal, the path by which men or horses tow or pull the vessels through the water. To wallop in a tow, to dangle from the gallows.

And ere I wed another jade,
I'll wallop in a tow.

—BURNS: The Weary Pund o' Tow.

I hae another tow on my rock [I have other business to attend to].—SCOTS Proverb.

Jamieson derives tow from the Swedish tog, the substance of which ropes are made. It is more likely from the Gaelic taod, a rope, a string, a halter.

Towdy, a jocular term for the breech, fundament, podex, or doup, especially when abnormally large. From this word comes the English dowdy, applied to an ill-dressed and unshapely woman, large in the hips. The derivation is possibly from the Gaelic doideach, fleshy, muscular.

Towhead, a head with flaxen or very light-coloured hair. A term used in America, according to Bartlett's Dictionary of Americanisms, for "a flaxen-headed urchin."

Towmond, a twelvemonth.

How 'twas a towmond auld, sin' lint was i' the bell.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Surrounded wi' peat an' wi' heather,
Where muircocks and plovers were rife,
For mony a long towmond together
There lived an auld man an' his wife.

—ANDREW SCOTT: Symon and Janet.

Towzie, rough, hairy, shaggy; whence towzer, the name sometimes applied in England to a terrier.

His towzie back
Weel clad wi' coat o' glossy black.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

A towzie tyke, black, grim, and large,
To gie them music was his charge.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Toy, a woman's cap. This word is probably from the Gaelic toil, pleasure, applied to the finery with which it is the pleasure, and often the toil, of women to adorn or attire themselves, and was originally given to the ordinary mutch or indoor head-dress when bedizened with ribbons.

Toyte, to dawdle, to take things easily; from the Gaelic taile, ease, pleasure.

We've won to crazy years thegither,
We'll toyte about wi' ane anither,
Wi' tentie care I'll sit thy tether

To some hain'd rig,
Where ye may doucely rax your leather
Wi' sma' fatigue.

—BURNS: Auld Farmer to his Auld Mare, Maggie.

Traik, to lounge, to gad about, to follow idly after women; from the Flemish trekken, to walk, to draw or pull along.

There is not a huzzy on this side of thirty that ye can bring within your doors, but there will be chieles, writer lads, 'prentice lads, and what not, come traiking after them for their destruction.—SCOTT: Heart of Midlothian.

Trattle. The resemblance of this word to prattle, from prate, has led Jamieson and others to suppose that its meaning is identical. But it is by no means clear that the supposition is well founded, or that trattle, prattle, and rattle are related in meaning, notwithstanding the similarity of sound. The word seems to be akin to, or to be derived from, the German trotzen, the Flemish trots, to dare, to defy, to be arrogant or presumptuous; trotzig, violent.

Oh better I'll keep my green cleiding
Frae gude Earl Richard's bluid,
Than thou canst keep thy clattering tongue
That trattles in thy head.

—EARL RICHARD: Border Minstrelsy.

Against the proud Scots clattering
That never will leave their trattling.

—SKELTON: Against the Scottis, quoted by SIR WALTER SCOTT
in Border Minstrelsy.

The German and Flemish trotzen would more fully meet the meaning and spirit of the epithet than any derivation from prattle could pretend to.

Treacherous as Garrick, false as Garrick, deep as Garrick.

These phrases are current in England as well as in Scotland, and can have no possible connection with the name of Garrick, or to the renowned actor who bore it in the last century. The true origin is unknown. It is possible, however, that treacherous as Garrick may mean treacherous as a caoireagh (or caoireach), Gaelic for a blazing fire. This suggestion is offered faute de mieux. A Highlander, however, is of opinion that Garrick is a corruption of coruig, a deep, gloomy, and treacherous loch in the island of Skye. "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?"

Trig, neat, clean, attractive; usually derived from the English trick or tricky, which has not the same meaning. Also, a fop, or a person giving too much attention to his personal appearance.

It is my humour: you are a pimp and a trig,

An Amadis de Gaul, or a Don Quixote.

—BEN JONSON: The Alchemist.

And you among them a', John,
Sae trig from top to toe.

—BURNS: John Anderson.

The word seems to be derived from the Dutch and Flemish trek, to attract. Though Jamieson derives it from the English trick, or trick out, to dress gaudily or finely, it is possibly either from the Welsh or Kymric trig, firm-set, or the Gaelic triathach (th silent, triac), splendid.

Trimmer, trimmie, disrespectful terms applied to a scolding or irascible woman. From the Gaelic dream, or tream, to snarl, to grin angrily; dreamach, morose, peevish, ill-natured; dreamag, or dréimeag, a vixen, a shrew.

Troggin, wares exchanged with servant girls for the odds and ends of a household by travelling pedlars; trog, old clothes; trogger, or trocker, a pedlar, one who deals in old clothes. It is doubtful whether these words are from the French troquer, to barter, the English truck, or from the Dutch and Flemish troggelen, to beg under pretence of selling trifles that nobody requires. The word appears as troke in Halliwell's Archaic Dictionary.

Buy braw troggin,

Frae the banks o' Dee;

Wha' wants troggin,

Let him come to me.

—BURNS: An Election Song.

Trolloy, a term which, according to Jamieson, occurs in a rhyme sung by young people in Scotland at Hogmanay, the last day of the old year, and the morning of the new. "It has," he says, "been viewed as a corruption of the French trois rois allais, three kings are come!" In this sentence the word allais is ungrammatical and incorrect, for trois rois sont venus. But independently of the bad French, the etymology is entirely wrong. The word, or words, are part of a very ancient Druidical chorus, sung two thousand years ago at the dawning of the day, in honour of the sunrise: trà là là! From the Gaelic tràth (tra), early; and là, day, signifying not "the three kings are come," but "Day! early day!" equivalent to the "Hail, early morn!" of a well-known modern song.

Tron. There is a Tron Church in Edinburgh and another in Glasgow; but the Scottish Glossaries and Jamieson's "Scottish Dictionary" make no mention of the word. It would appear from a passage in Hone's "Every-day Book" that Tron signified a public weighing-machine, or scale in a market-place, where purchasers of commodities might, without fee, satisfy themselves that the weight of their purchase was correct. Hence a "Tron Church" was a church in the market-place near which the public weighing-machine was established. The word is derived from the Gaelic trom, heavy, or a weight.

Tronie, a tedious story that has been often repeated, and that causes a sense of weariness in the person condemned to listen to it. From the Gaelic trom or tron, heavy, tedious. The same epithet is applied to a boy who is unable to learn his lessons.

Trow or drow, the evil one. From the Gaelic droch, evil, bad, wicked. Sea trowes, evil spirits of the sea; to trow, or drow, to wish evil, to imprecate.

Trullion, a low, base, dirty fellow. The English has trull, the feminine of this word, applied to an immoral woman of the lowest class. The origin is the Gaelic truail, to pollute, to debase; and truilleach, a base, dirty person.

Tryste, an appointed place of meeting, a rendezvous; of the same origin as trust, or confidence, from the idea that he who appoints a tryste with another trusts that the other will keep or be faithful to it. The word occurs in Chaucer, and in several old English MSS. of his period; but is not used by Spenser, Shakspeare, or later writers. "To bide tryste," to be true to time and place of meeting.

"You walk late, sir," said I. "I bide tryste," was the reply, "and so I think do you, Mr. Osbaldistone?"—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Rob Roy.

The tenderest-hearted maid
That ever bided tryste at village stile.
—TENNISON.

By the wine-god he swore it, and named the trysting-day.

—LORD MACAULAY.

No maidens with blue eyes
Dream of the trysting hour
Or bridal's happier time.

—Under Green Leaves.

When I came to Ardgour I wrote to Lochiel to tryste me where to meet him.—
Hogg's *Jacobite Relics: Letter from Rob
Roy to General Gordon*.

Tuath de Danaan. This name has been given to a colony of northmen who early settled in Ireland, and afterwards passed into Argyllshire. From tuath, north; tuathach, northern; and dan, bold, warlike; and dansher, (dan-er), a warrior, a bold man; and also a Dane. Tuath de Danaan is a corruption, in which the second word de ought to have no place of tuathaich and dan or dana. The Very Rev. Canon Bourke, in his work on the Aryan origin of the Gaelic language, says "The Tuath de Danaans were a large, fair-complexioned, and very remarkable race, warlike, energetic, progressive, musical, poetical, skilled in Druidism," &c. Mr. Pym Yeatman, in "The Origin of the Nations of Europe," who quotes these and other passages, is of opinion that the Tuath de Danaans were Scandinavians, a supposition which their Gaelic designation fully corroborates. Of course they brought with them their own language, many of the words of which were in course of time incorporated with the speech of the people with whom they amalgamated.

This accounts for the many Danish words both in modern Gaelic and in Lowland Scotch.

Tuilyie or toolzie, a broil, a struggle, a quarrel; tuiliesome, quarrelsome; tuilscour, a quarrelsome person, a wrangler. Though Jamieson derives tuilzie from the French touiller—a word which is not to be found in the French dictionaries—to stir or agitate water, it is probably derived from the same source as the quasi-synonymous English tussle, and akin to the Gaelic tuisleach, a tumult, a quarrel among several persons; and tuileas, riot; whence, also, townle, to pull about roughly, to dishevel or disorder.

A toolying (toolzieing) tyke comes limping lame.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The toolzie's tough 'tween Pitt and Fox,
And our gude wife's wee birdie cocks.

BURNS: Elegy on the Year 1788.

But though dull prose folk Latin splatter

In logic tulzie,

I hope we bardies ken some better

Than mind sic brutzie.

—BURNS: To William Simpson.

What verse can sing, what prose recite,

The butcher deeds of bloody fate

Amid this mighty tulzie.

—BURNS: Epistle to Robert Graham.

Tulcan. Mr. Gladstone, during his electioneering raid into Midlothian, in November 1879, explained at Dalkeith the meaning of tulcan.

My noble friend, Lord Rosebery, speaking to me of the law of hypothec, said that the bill of Mr. Vans Agnew on hypothec is a Tulcan Bill. A tulcan, I believe, is a figure of a calf stuffed with straw, and it is, you know, an old Scottish custom among farmers to place the tulcan calf under a cow to induce her to give milk.

Jamieson writes the word tulchane, and cites the phrase a tulchane bishop, as the designation of one who received the episcopate on condition of assigning the temporalities to a secular person. In some parts of Scotland the people say a tourkin calf, instead of a tulcan calf, and it is difficult to say which of the two words is the more correct, or in what direction we must look for the etymology. Tulcan, in the Gaelic, signifies a hollow or empty head, that of the mocked calf stuffed with straw, from toll, hollow, and cean, a head; while tourkin would seem to be derived from tur, to invent, and cean, a head; therefore signifying a head invented for the occasion, to deceive the mother.

A tourkin calf, or lamb, is one that wears a skin not its own. A tourkin lamb is one taken from its dam, and given to another ewe that has lost her own. In this case, the shepherd takes the skin of the dead lamb, and puts it on the back of the living one, and thus so deceives the ewe that she allows the stranger to suck.—JAMIESON.

Tumbler, a drinking-glass of a larger size than is ordinarily used for wine. The derivation may be from tumble, to fall over; as in the deep drinking days, happily passed away, glasses were round at the base, without stems, and a drinker who held one full in his hand had to drink off the contents, before he could set it down, without spilling the liquor. "Tak' a tumbler," i.e., take a glass of toddy, is a common invitation to convivial intercourse. "Three tumblers and an eke" were once considered a fair allowance for a man after dinner, or before retiring to rest. A Highland writer once suggested that the derivation was from taom, pour out or empty, and leor, enough. This was apt, and may perhaps be the true etymology. Jamieson has tumbler, the French tombrel, a cart; but this can have no relation to the convivial glass.

Tum-deif. Jamieson suggests that perhaps this word means swooning, and refers it to the Icelandic tumba, the English tumble, to fall to the ground. It seems, however, to be no other than a mis-spelling of dumb-deaf, or deaf and dumb.

Tumph, a blockhead. From the German dumm, stupid, the Dutch and Flemish dom. Tumfie, or tumhie, is diminutive of tumph.

Lang Jamie was employed in trifling jobs on market days, especially in holding horses for the farmers. He was asked his charge by a stranger to the town. "Hoot! I hae nae charge; sometimes a tumph offers me twa bawbees, but a gentleman like you always gies me a saxpence!"—Laird of Logan.

Tunag, a kind of jacket worn by women in the Highlands of Scotland and in Ireland, and covering the shoulders, back, and hips; a tunic. "If not derived from the Latin tunica," says Jamieson, "it may be from the same root." It is from the same root in a language much older than the Latin—the Celtic and Gaelic ton, the posterior, the hips. The Greeks called that part of the body πυγή, whence, in the learned slang of the English universities, the coat-tails were called "pygastoles," and by some irreverent undergraduates, "bum curtains." The word in Scottish Gaelic is tonag, and in Irish Gaelic tonach.

Turninspike, a name given by the Highlanders to a high road or turnpike road when first made to the north of Inverness. Great consternation is said to have been excited in Ross-shire when a sheriff's officer and a toll-collector first appeared in Tain. "Lord preserve us!" said one townsman to his neighbour, "what'll come next? The law has reached Tain!"

Another law came after this,
She never saw the like, man,
They mak a lang road on the crund
(the ground)
An' ca' him turninspike, man.

But she'll awa to Highland hills
Where deil a ane can turn her,
And no come near to turninspike,
Unless it be to burn her.

—Jacobite Songs and Ballads.

Tutti, tatie, according to Jamieson, is an interjection equivalent to the English pshaw! But Hey! tuttie tatie is the name of an old Scottish martial air, to which Burns adapted his noble song of "Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled." To this spirited melody, according to tradition, the troops of King Robert Bruce marched to the great victory of Bannockburn. The words are derived from the Gaelic, familiar to the soldiers of Bruce, aite dudach taite! from dudach, to sound the trumpet, and taite, joy, and may be freely translated, "Let the joyous trumpets sound!" The battle of Bannockburn was fought in an age when the bagpipe had not become common in Scotland, and when the harp was pre-eminently the national instrument in peace as the trumpet was in war. Jamieson, not quite sure of Pshaw as an interpretation, adds that "the words may have been meant as imitative of the sound of the trumpet in giving the charge."

It may be remarked that possibly there may be a remote connection between Jamieson's idea of Pshaw and that of the blast of trumpets. Fanfare in French signifies a blast on a trumpet, and a fanfaron is a braggadocio, a vain boaster, a braggart, or one who blows the trumpet of his own praises. For such a one in the full flow of his self-laudation, the impatient interjection, Pshaw! would be equally appropriate and well-merited.

When you hear the trumpet sound
Tutti tatti to the drum,
 Up your sword, and down your gun,
 And to the loons again!

—Jacobite Relics: WHEATLEY'S
Reduplicated Words in the English Language.

Tut-mute and tuilzie mulzie, described in Wheatley's Dictionary of Reduplicated Words "as a muttering or grumbling between parties that has not yet assumed the form of a broil." This odd phrase, signifying a fierce quarrel that had but slight beginning, is presented in the proverb—

It began in a laigh tute-mute,
 An' it rose to a wild tuilzie mulzie.

—JAMIESON.

Tut is the Gaelic dud, the sound or toot upon a wind instrument, a horn, a flute, a whistle or a trumpet—and mute is a corruption of maoth, soft, gentle. Tuilzie is a brawl, a scuffle, a fight, from the Gaelic tuailcas, riot, disorder, conflict, tumult; tuailcasag, a quarrelsome, foul-mouthed woman; a scold, and mileadh, battle. The proverb expresses a meaning similar to that in Allan Ramsay—"It began wi' needles and pins, and ended wi' horned nowte."

Twasome, threesome, foursome.

The numerals two, three, and four, with the addition of the syllable some, are used in a sense of which they are not susceptible in English. A twasome walk, or a twasome interview, is often rendered in English by the French phrase tête-à-tête.

Threesome and foursome reels, dances in which three or four persons participate.

There's threesome reels and foursome reels,
 There's hornpipes and strathpeys, man,
 But the best dance in a' the town
 Is the Deil's awa' wi' the Exciseman.

—BURNS.

Tway, a pair, a couple, the English twain; two, sometimes written two.

Every knight had a lady bright,
 And every squire a May;
 Her own self chose Lord Livingstone—
 They were a lovely tway.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: Lord Livingstone.

Twime and thrive, a couplet and a triplet. These are words that have not yet been admitted into the dictionaries.

Twine, to rob, to deprive; to part with, to relinquish. Etymology uncertain; supposed to be from the English twain, two, thence to separate into two.

The fish shall swim the flood nae mair,
 Nor the corn grow through the day,
 Ere the fiercest fire that ever was kindled
Twine me and Rothiemay.

—Ballad of the Fire of Frendraught.

My duddie is a cankert carle
 Will no twine wi' his gear.

—JAMES CARNEGIE.

Brandy . . .

Twines many a poor, doylt, drucken hash
 Of half his days.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Tyke, a mongrel, a rough dog; originally a house dog; from the Gaelic tigh, or taigh, a house. The word is common in Yorkshire, and in' all the Northern Counties of England.

Tyke-tyrit or tired. Tired or wearied, as a dog or tyke after a long chase.

Base tyke, call'st thou me host?

—SHAKESPEARE: Henry V.

Nae tawted (uncombed) tyke.

—BURNS: The Twa Dogs.

He was a gash and faithful tyke.

—Idem.

I'm as tired of it as a tyke of lang kail.

You have lost your own stomach and found a tyke's.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

U

Ug, ugg, to feel extreme loathing or disgust. Ugsome, frightful; ugsomeness, frightfulness, horror.

They would ug a body at them.

—JAMIESON.

Ugsome to hear was her wild eldrich shriek.

The ugsomeness and silence of the night.

—DOUGLAS: Translation of the Enid.

Who dang us and flang us into this ugsome mire.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Vision.

This word seems to be akin to the English ugly, which all the philologists who ignore the Gaelic as one of the sources of the English language, derive either from the Danish huggern, to shiver, or from other equally improbable Teutonic roots. In Gaelic aog (quasi ug), signifies death, a ghost, a skeleton, and aogail, ghastly, deathlike, ugly.

Ultimus eekibus, the very last glass of whisky toddy, or eke, one drop more at a convivial gathering before parting for the night; the last of the ekes.

Umbersorrow, hardy, rough, rude, uncultivated. This corrupt word, of which Jamieson cites a still corrupter, "a number sorrow," is clearly derived from the Flemish and Teutonic unbesorgt, uncared for, wild, neglected, growing in the strength of nature without human assistance. Jamieson cites its use in the Lothians in the sense of "rugged, of a surly disposition," applied to one whose education has been neglected, and who is without good manners.

Umquhile or umwhile, at one time, formerly; used also in the sense of departed or late, in such phrases as, "my late husband," "my departed wife," my umquhile husband, my umquhile wife; from the Flemish om, past, and wijl, a short time, the same as the English while, a short time past, a short while ago.

Unco, strange, unknown, a wonder, a strange thing; an abbreviation of uncouth. Unco guid, extremely good, very good.

The unco guid, and the rigidly righteous.
—BURNS.

An unco cockernony.—GALT.
Nae safe wading in unco waters.
Like a cow in an unco loan.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.
Each tells the uncos that he sees or hears.
—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Unfurthersome, unpropitious; applied to the weather, if too cold, or too rainy, and preventing the due ripening of the crops.

Ungainly, awkward, uncouth, insufficient, clumsy; gainly, pleasant, fit, proper, pleased; gane, to serve, to suffice, to fit, to be appropriate; unganed, inappropriate. Gainly and ungainly are not exactly synonymous in Scottish parlance with the English word. Gainly is nearly obsolete in England; and ungainly merely signifies awkward, clumsy. The root of the words in the Scottish sense is the Gaelic gean, good-humour, fitness, comeliness; geanail, comely, fit, proper, pleasant, serviceable. In the following quotation gane means to serve or suffice:—

But there is neither bread nor kale
To gane my men and me.
—Battle of Otterbourne, Old Version.

Unkensome, not to be known or recognised, not to be traced.

A smith! a smith! Dickie, he cries,
A smith, a smith right speedilie!
To turn back the caukers o' our horses'
shoon
For its unkensome we wad be.
—Border Minstrelsy: Archie o' Ca'field.

Unmackly, mis-shapen, deformed.

Up then sterts the stranger knight,
Said Ladye be not thou afraid,
I fight for thee with this grim Soldan
Though he's sair unmackly made.
—Ballad of Sir Cauline.

Untholeable, intolerable, unendurable, insufferable; from thole, to endure.

He got untholeably divertin', and folk complained o' pains in their sides wi laughin'.—Noctes Ambrosianae.

Upporrock, worn out, bankrupt. According to Jamieson, a Shetland word, which he derives from "Icelandic app and throka, also thruka, urgere, primere." It seems to be rather from the Flemish op drogen, dried up, exhausted.

Uppil, to clear up; applied to the weather.

When the weather at any time has been wet, and ceases to be so, we say it is uppled.
—JAMIESON.

From the Teutonic aufhellen—auf, up; hellen, to become clear, to clear up.

Upon luck's head, by chance.
"I got it on luck's head," I got it by chance.

Urisk, according to Jamieson, was a name given in the Highlands of Scotland to a satyr. It was in reality the name given to a Brownie or Puck, the Robin Goodfellow of English fairy mythology; from the Gaelic uirisg, a goblin. (See WIRBY-COW.)

V

Vanquish, a disease among sheep and lambs, caused by their eating a certain unwholesome grass. Jamieson says the disease is so called because it vanquishes the sheep! He might as well account for the name of Kilmarnock, by stating that one Marnock was killed there. Vanquish is a corruption of the Gaelic uain, pale green, and cuisseach or cuisicag, a species of rank grass with a long stalk that grows on wet soil and is deleterious to cattle, and especially to sheep. Cuisseach is possibly the same as couch grass, described in Halliwell's Archaic and Provincial Dictionary as a kind of coarse grass that grows very quickly, and is sometimes called twitch grass.

Vaudy or vaudie, gay, showy; a corruption of the English gaudy.

Our land shall be glad, but the Whigs shall be sorry
When the King gets his ain, and heaven gets the glory;

The rogues shall be sad, but the honest man
vaudie

When the throne is possessed by our ain bonnie laddie.

—Jacobite Relics of Scotland.

Vauntie, proud, vain, also a braggart; from the French vanter, to boast.

Her cutty sark

In longitude though sorely scanty,
It was her best, and she was vauntie.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

Vir, force, vigour. Sometimes written bir, a vein; from the Latin vis, vires. Possibly the English burly, strong, is of kindred origin.

Swith with vir he whirled her round.

—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Wi' vengeful vir, and Norland twang. —Ibid.

Vlonk, or Wlonk, splendidly dressed, richly attired; from the "Anglo Saxon" or old English vlonke, which has the same meaning. Possibly this may be the origin of the modern word flunkey, in contemptuous allusion to the grayish colours of the liveries of male servants in great ostentatious families. (See FLUNKEY, ante, p. 60).

W

Wa', abbreviation of wall. "His back is at the wa'," i.e., he is driven into a corner; his back is at the wall, fighting against opposing enemies or creditors.

Wabster, a weaver; from weave and web.

Willie Wastle dwalt on Tweed,

The spot they ca'd it Linkum-doddie,
Willie was a wabster gude.

BURNS.

An honest wabster to his trade,
Whose wife's twa nieves were scarce weel bred.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Wad, to wager, to bet; from the Flemish wedden, which has the same meaning. Wads also signify forfeits; a game at wads, a game at forfeits; wad-set, a mortgage; wad, a pledge.

The gray was a mare and a right good mare,

But when she saw the Annan water,
She could not hae ridden a furlong mair,
Had a thousand merks been wadded at her.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border: Annan Water.

Wads are nae arguments.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

My Sunday's coat she has laid it in wad,
And the best blue bonnet e'er was on my head;

At kirk or at market I'm covered but barely,

Oh that my wife would drink hooly and fairly.

—HERD'S Collection: The Drucken Wife o' Galloway.

Waddie, vigorous, willing, alert, ready to do.

What fee will you give me for now and for aye—

Was e'er a young laddie sae waddie as I.

—BUCHAN'S Ancient Ballads: The Rigwoodie Carlin'.

Wae's! woe is; unlucky, unhappy, in ill plight.

Wae's the wife that wants the tongue,
but wae's the man that gets her.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

And aye the o'erword o' his sang

Was—wae's me for Prince Charlie.

—Jacobite Song.

Waesuck! wae's-heart! wae's-me! Interjections or expressions of surprise or sorrow, like alas!

Waesuck! for him that gets nae lass,
Or lasses that hae naething.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

The derivation of wae's-heart and wae's-me, from wae, sorrow, is obvious; that of waesuck is not so clear. It is probably from the Flemish wee, sorrow or love, and sugt or zucht, a sigh. Jamieson derives it from the Danish usig, woe to us; væ no-bis, woe to us. The word, however, is not to be found in Danish dictionaries.

Waff, wauf, waft. A freak, a whiff, a wave of sound or of wind, a sudden and slight impression upon the senses, a transient glance, a glimpse, a passing odour. "A waff o' cauld" is a slight attack of cold. "I had a waff o' him i' the street;" I had a glimpse of him. "There was a waff o' roses:" there was a sudden odour of roses. The primitive idea at the root of the word is sudden and of short duration, rising and subsiding like a wave.

Waff, worthless, or shabby in appearance and conduct; idle, dissipated; waffie, a loafer, an idler, a vagrant, a vagabond; waff-like, resembling a vagabond in manners and appearance; waffinger, a confirmed vagrant and idler. These words are of uncertain etymology, though it is probable that they are all from the same root as the English waif, a stray, a vagrant, one who, like the Italian traviato and traviata, has gone astray from the right and respectable path, and formed on the same principle from way off, or off the way. Another possible root is the Flemish zuerven (with the elision of the initial z), to go astray, to vagabondise.

Wa'gang or awa'-gang, departure; ganging awa', going away; an escape.

Winter's wa'gang.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

A wa'gang crop is the last crop gathered before a tenant quits his farm; also the name given to the canal, through which the water escapes from the mill wheel.—JAMIESON.

Its dowie in the end o' hairst,

At the wa'gang o' the swallow,

When the wind grows cauld and the burn
grows bauld,

And the weeds are hanging yellow;

But oh, it's dowie far to see

The wa'gang o' her that the heart gangs wi'.

—HEW AINSLIE.

Waghorn. In the North of Scotland it is a proverbial phrase to say of a great liar that "he lies like Waghorn," or is "waur than Waghorn," that "he is as false as Waghorn, and Waghorn was nineteen times falsier than the devil." Jamieson records that "Waghorn is a fabulous personage, who being a greater liar than the devil, was crowned King of Liars." Why the name of Waghorn, any more than that of Wagstaffe, both respectable patronymics, should be selected to adorn or to disfigure the proverb is not easy to explain, except on the supposition that the traditionary "waghorn" is a corruption of a word that has a more rational as well as a more definite meaning. And such it is found to be. In Gaelic uaigh (quasi wag) signifies the grave, the pit, and iutharn (*iuar*n, quasi horn) signifies hell, whence he lies like Waghorn, would signify he "lies like hell" or like the "pit of hell," consequently worse than the devil, who is supposed to be but one, while the other devils in the pit are supposed to be multitudinous.

Waif, a derelict, a wanderling; one found by accident after having been lost or gone astray. The word in this sense has lately been adopted into English literature as a noun; but in Scotland it is employed both as a noun and an adjective.

Wi' her I will get gowd and gear,

Wi' thee, I sall get nane;

Ye cam to me as a waif woman,

I'll leave thee as the same.

—HERD'S Collection: Fair Annie.

This word, sometimes written and pronounced waif, waffie, and waffinger, signifies a wanderer, a strolling vagabond, lost to civilised life and society; waff-like, of vagabond and disreputable appearance.

Waith, to wander, a wandering and straying. The English waif, waifs and strays, things or persons that have wandered or gone astray. The etymology is doubtful; perhaps from waft, to be blown about by the wind, or carried by the waters.

Wale, to choose, to select, a choice; waly, choice. From the German wahlen, to choose.

Scones, the wale o' food.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

There's auld Rob Morris that wons in yon glen,
He's the king o' guid fellows and wale
o' auld men.

—BURNS.

The Laird of Balmamon, after dinner at a friend's house, had cherry brandy put before him in mistake for port. He liked the liquor, and drank freely of it. His servant Harry or "Hairy" was to drive him home in a gig. On crossing the moor, whether from greater exposure to the blast, or from the Laird's unsteadiness of head, his hat and wig fell to the ground. Harry got off to pick them up and restore them to his master. The Laird was satisfied with the hat, but demurred to the wig. "It's no my wig, Harry lad; it's no my wig." "Ye'd better tak it, sir," said Harry; "for there's nae wale o' wigs on the moor."—DEAN RAMSAY'S Reminiscences.

He wales a portion wi' judicious care,
And let us worship God, he says, wi' solemn air.

—BURNS: Cotter's Saturday Night.

Wallageous. This obsolete word is used by the ancient Scottish poet, Barbour, in the sense of sportive, wanton, lustful. It is evidently a corruption of the Gaelic uallach, which has the same meaning; uallachūs, cheerfulness, gaiety, frolicsomeness, conceitedness, wantonness; uallachag, a coquette.

Wallie, a toy; a bonnie wallie, a pretty toy; from wale, choice; from the Teutonic wahlen.

Walloch, a name applied in the Lowlands to the Highland fling, or other dance, and not to the reel, which is less active and boisterous. The word also means a frisk or kick. The word seems to be derived from the Gaelic uallach, joyous, frisky.

I wat she was a cantie quean,
And weel could dance the Highland
walloch.

—Roy's Wife of Aldivalloch.

Auld Roy look'd as he gaed by,
And oh! he gaed an unco walloch;
And after them he soon did hie,
And followed through the braes of Balloch.

—BUCHAN'S Collection of Old Scottish Ballads.

The word is sometimes written wallop, as in the favourite song of "Maggie Lauder":—

Meg up and wallop'd o'er the green,
For brawly she could frisk it.

Walloch-goul, an abusive epithet applied to a wanton or arrogant blusterer; from the Gaelic uallach, and gail, to cry out. (See YOWL.)

Wallop, to dangle, to hang, to sway about with quick motion, to swing.

Now let us lay our heads thegither,
In love fraternal;
May Envy wallop in a tether,
Black fiend, infernal!

—BURNS: To Lafrank.

Wallow, to fade away; wallowed, faded, withered by cold, blight, or natural decay; the etymon doubtless of the word wilt, in common use in America, and in some parts of England, of which a ludicrous example is given by the humorist, Artemus Ward: "I said to her, wilt thou? and she wilted." The derivation is uncertain, though probably from the Teutonic welken.

The last time that I saw her face
She ruddy was and red,
But now, alas! and woe is me,
She's wallowed like a weed.

—SCOTT'S Border Minstrelsy: Ballad of the Gay Goss-Hawk.

Waly! waly! an interjection of sorrow; alas! or, woe is me! Derived from wail, to lament, or wail ye! lament ye; the Teutonic wch, woe, and wchlich, woful.

Oh waly! waly! but love is bonnie,
A little time while it is new;
But when it's auld it waxes cauld,
And fades'awa' like morning dew.

—Ballad of the Marchioness of Douglas.

Oh waly! waly! up the bank,
And waly! waly! down the brae,
And waly! waly! yon burn side,
Where I and my love went to gae.
—Lady Anne Bothwell's Lament.

Wame, the belly; also the English word womb, which is from the same etymological root. The Scottish derivatives of wame are numerous; among others, wamie, having much wame, i.e., corpulent; wamieness, corpulency; wamyt, pregnant; wame-tow, a belly-band or girth, from wame, the belly, and tow (the Gaelic taod), a rope, a band; wamefu', a bellyfull.

I never liked water in my shoon; and my wame's made o' better leather.

Was to the wame that has a wilfu master.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Food fills the wame, and keeps us livin',
Though life's a gift no worth receivin',
When heavy dragged wi' pine and grievin'.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

A wamefu' is a wamefu', whether it be of barley-meal or bran.—SCOTT: *St.
Ronan's Well*.

Wame has disappeared from English literature, but still survives in the current speech of the northern counties. Womb, in English, was formerly applied to the male sex, in the sense of the Scottish wame, or belly, as appears from Piers Ploughman:—

Paul, after his preaching,
Paniers he made,
And wan with his handes
What his wombe needed.

(Gained with his hands what his belly needed.) In recent times the word is restricted in its meaning to the female sex, though used metaphorically and poetically in such phrases as the "womb of Time."

The earth was formed, but in the womb
as yet
Of waters, embryo immature.

—Paradise Lost.

Caves and womby vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass.

—SHAKESPEARE: Henry V.

Among the three interpretations of the word, as given by

Johnson, the last is "a cavity." The only traces of anything like wame, or womb, that appears in any of the Teutonic languages, or in high or low Dutch, is the Swedish wam, signifying tripe. Though Johnson derives womb from the Anglo-Saxon and from Icelandic, it may be suggested that the more ancient Celtic and Gaelic provides the true root of both wame and womb in uaimh and uamh, a cavity, a cave, a hollow place. The Shakspearean adjective womby finds its synonym in the Gaelic uamhach, abounding in cavities or hollows.

Wan, pale green, as applied to the colour of a river in certain states of the water and the atmosphere. Many philologists have been of opinion that wan, both in English and Scotch, always signifies pale. Jamieson, however, thought differently, and translated wan as "black, gloomy, dark-coloured, or rather filthy," not reflecting, however, that these epithets, especially the last, were hardly consistent with the spirit or dignity of the tender or tragical ballads in which wan occurred. The etymology of the English wan has been traced to wane, to decrease in health and strength, as well as in size, whence wan, the pallor of countenance that attends failing health. That of the Scottish wan, as applied to the colour of the streams, was for the first time suggested in "The Gaelic Etymology of the Languages of Western Europe." It is from the Gaelic uaine, a pale blue, inclining to green. This is the usual colour of the beautiful streams of the Highlands, when not rendered "drumlie" or muddy by the storms that wash down sand and earth from the banks.

On they rade, and on they rade,
And a' by the light o' the moon,
Until they came to the wan water,
And then they lighted down.

—The Douglas Tragedy.

Deep into the wan water
There stands a muckle stane.

—Earl Richard.

The ane has ta'en him by the head,
The ither by the feet,
And thrown him in the wan water
That ran baith wide and deep.

—Lord William.

There's no a bird in a' this forest
Will do as muckle for me
As dip its wing in the wan water,
And straik it ower my e'e bree.

—Johnnie o' Bradislee.

In English, wan is never used as an epithet except when applied to the countenance, as in such phrases—"His face was pale and wan," and occasionally by poetic license, to the face of the moon, as in the beautiful sonnet of Sir Philip Sidney.

With how sad steps, oh moon! thou climb'st the sky,
How silently, and with how wan a
face.

Wanchancie, unlucky, mischanceful.

Wae worth the man wha first did shape
That vile wanchancie thing—a rape.

—BURNS: Poor Maitie's Elegy.

Wandought, weak, deficient in power; from dow, to be able; doughty, brave; and wan, or un, the privative particle. Wandocht, a weak, silly creature.

By this time Lindy is right well shot out
Twixt nine and ten, I think, or thereabout, Nae bursen-bailch, nae wandought or mis-grown,
But plump and swack, and like an apple
roun'.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

Wanhope, despair. Jamieson incorrectly renders it "delusive hope." This is an old English word which is nearly obsolete, but still survives in Scotland.

I sterve in wanhope and distress,— Farewell, my life, my lust and my gladnesse.

—CHAUCER: The Knight's Tale.

Good Hope that helpe shulde
To wanhope turneth.

—PIERS Ploughman.

Some philologists, misled by the prefix wan, have imagined that the word was synonymous with wane, and have interpreted wanhope as the "waning of hope." But wan is the Dutch and Flemish negative prefix, equivalent to the English and German un. Among other beautiful Scottish words which follow the Flemish in the use of the negative prefix, are wanearthlie, preternatural or unearthly; wanfortune, ill-luck; wangrace, wickedness, ungraciousness; wanrest, inquietude; wanworth, useless, valueless; wanthrif, prodigality, extravagance; wanuse, abuse; wanwit or wanwith, ignorance.

An' may they never learn the gaets (ways)
Of ither vile wanrestful pets.

—BURNS: Poor Mailie.

Wanwierd, misfortune, ill-luck, calamity.

Nor wit, nor power, put off the hour
For his wanwierd decreed.

—*Border Minstrelsy: The Water
Kelpie*.

Wap, in England written wad, a bundle of straw, a wisp, used in the Scottish sense in the North of England; from the Flemish koop, a bundle, a pile of hay or straw. To be in the wap or wad, to lie in the straw.

Moll i' the wap and I fell out,
I'll tell ye what 'twas a' about,—
She had siller and I had nane,
That was the gait the steer began.

—Gipsy Song.

The English version among the gipsies is—

Moll i' the wad and I fell out,
She had money and I had none,
That was the way the row began.

Ware, to spend, to guide, to control or guide one's expense discreetly.

My heart's blood for her I would freely
ware,
Sae be I could relieve her of her care.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

But aiblins, honest Master Heron
Had at the time some dainty fair one,
To ware his theologic care on.

—BURNS: To Dr. Blacklock.

This word is most probably a corruption of the Teutonic fuhren, the Flemish voeren, to lead or guide.

Ill-won gear is aye ill warded.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.
[Ill-acquired money is always ill guided or spent.]

The best o' chieles are whyles in want,
While cuifs on countless thousands rant,
And ken na how to ward't.

BURNS: Epistle to Davie.

Warklike, Warkrife, industrious, fond of work.

Warklume, a tool, a working tool.
The second syllable of this word remains in the English loom, part of the working apparatus of the weaver. In Scotland lume signifies any kind of tool or implement with which work can be done. Burns uses it in a very ludicrous sense in the
"Address to the Deil."

Thence mystic knots mak great abuse
On young gudemen fond, keen, and crouse,
When the best warklume i' the house

By cantrip wit,
Is instant made na worth a louse
Just at the bit.

This peculiar superstition prevails among all the Celtic peoples of Europe, and is thought to be the favourite and most malignant diversion of the devil and his instruments, the wizards and witches, to prevent the consummation of marriage on the bridal night. A full account of the alleged practices of several sorcerers who were burnt at the stake in France in the Middle Ages, for their supposed complicity in this crime, appears in the "History of Magic in France," by Jules Garinet, Paris,

1818. The name given in France to the "cantrip" mentioned by Burns was nouer l'aiguillette, or, tie the little knot. One unhappy Vidal de la Porte, accused of being a noueur d'aiguillette by repute and wont, was in the year 1597 sentenced to be hung and burned to ashes for having bewitched in this fashion several young bridegrooms. The sentence was duly executed, amid the applause of the whole community.

World's gear, worldly wealth; a word used for any valuable article of whatever kind, as in the phrases "I have nae world's gear," "I have no property whatever;" "there's nae world's gear in the glass but cauld water," nothing more costly than cold water.

But world's gear ne'er fashes me,—
My thocht is a' my Nannie, O.
—BURNS.

Warlock, a wizard. The Scottish word, though admitted into the English dictionaries, is not common either in English conversation or literature.

She prophesied that late or soon
Thou would be found deep drowned in Doon,
Or catch'd by warlocks in the mirk,
By Alloway's auld haunted kirk.

—BURNS: Tam o' Shanter.

In the ancient time of Druid-ism, a wizard, an augur, a prophet, or fortune-teller, was called a Druid, a name that is still retained in modern Gaelic. The Lowland Scotch warlock is derived, according to Jamieson, from the Icelandic vardlokr, a magic song or incantation for calling up evil spirits. Mr. Stormonth, in his Etymological Dictionary, refers the word to the Anglo-Saxon waer, wary, and loga, a liar. It is more probable, however, that the word had not this uncomplimentary meaning; and that as wizard is derived from the German weise or wise, warlock has its root in a similar idea, and may come from the Gaelic geur, sharp, acute, cunning; and luchd, folk. It was not customary in the days when witches and fairies were commonly believed in, to speak disrespectfully of them. The fairies were "the good folk," the wizard was "the wise man," and the witch, in Irish parlance, was the Banshee (Bean-sith), or woman of peace; and warlock, in like manner, was an epithet implying the sagacity rather than the wickedness of the folk so designated. The change of the syllable geur into war is easily accounted for. The French guerre becomes war in English by the change—not uncommon—of g into w, as in wasp, from the French guêpe or guêpe. Another possible derivation is suggested in the "Gaelic Etymology of the Languages of Western Europe," from barr, head, top, chief; and loguid, a rascal; but the first is preferable.

Warple, to entangle, to intertwine wrongly. From the English warp, to twist or turn aside, as in the phrase, "His judgment is warped." The root of both the Scottish and English is the Flemish werede, to turn, or turn aside.

That yarn's sae warplit that I canna get it redd.

—JAMIESON.

Warsle, to wrestle, to contend, also to tumble violently after a struggle to keep the feet.

Upon her clood (hoof) she coost (cast) a hitch

And ower she warsted in the ditch.

—BURNS: Poor Mailie.

Wast, west; often used in the north-east of Scotland for beyond, further off.

Sir Robert Liston, British Ambassador at Constantinople, found two of his countrymen who had been especially recommended to him in a barber's shop, waiting to be shaved in turn. One of them came in rather late, and seeing he had scarcely room at the end of the seat, addressed the other—"Neebour, wad ye sit a wee bit wast?" What associations must have been called up in his mind by hearing, in a distant land, such an expression in Scottish tones!—DEAN RAMSAY.

Wat, to know, to wit. Obsolete English wot; Dutch and Flemish weten. Watna, wits not, knows not.

Little wats the ill-willy wife wha a dinner may haud in't.

Dame! deem warily; ye watna wha wytes yoursel.

Mickle water runs by that the miller wats na of.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Wath, a ford; a shallow part of the river that may be waded across. Either from the Flemish waad, or the Gaelic ath, a ford. Scotis-wath is the name given to the upper part of the Solway Firth, where, in certain states of the tide, people from the English side can wade across to Scotland.

Watter, water. The word is used in Scotland in the sense of a stream, a brook, a river; as in the phrase, "the water of Leith," and the Glasgow phrase, "Down the water," signifying down the Clyde. It is recorded of the noted Edinburgh advocate, John Clerk, afterwards Lord Eldin, that, in arguing a case of water privilege in Scotland before Lord Chancellor Eldon, he annoyed his lordship by constantly repeating the word watter with a strong Scottish accent. "Mr. Clerk," inquired his lordship, "is it the custom in your country to spell water with two t's?" "No, my lord," replied Clerk; "but it's the fashion in my country to spell manners wi' twa n's."

Wattie - wagtail. From Walter Wagtail, a name given to the beautiful little bird, the hoche-queue of the French; the motacilla yarrellie of the naturalists. The English have corrupted the word, not knowing its Scottish origin, into "water-wagtail," Walter, or Wattie, is a fond alliteration formed on the same principle as that of Robin Redbreast. Water-wagtail is an appellation given by the English to the pretty little creature, founded on the erroneous notion that it is an aquatic bird, or that it frequents the water more than it does the land. It comes with the flies and departs with the flies, which are its only food, and, unlike many other attractive birds, does no harm to fruit, blossoms, seeds, or any kind of vegetation. In some parts of Scotland it is called "Wullie," or "Willie-wagtail."

Wauchle, to weary; also, to puzzle, to sway from side to side; English, to waggle; Flemish wag-gelen, to vacillate, to stagger.

The road wauchlit him sair (made him stagger with fatigue).

That question wauchlit him (staggered him).

—JAMIESON.

Waight, a large deep draught of liquor. The etymology is uncertain. In most of the glossaries to Burns' Poems the word is erroneously joined with "willy," and converted into "willy-waught," and described as meaning "a hearty draught." The line in "Auld Lang Syne," usually printed—

We'll drink a right gude willy-waught, should be

We'll drink a right gude-willie waught;
i.e., we'll drink with right good will a deep or hearty waught or draught.

Dean Ramsay, whose undoubted knowledge and appreciation of the Scottish language should have taught him better, has fallen into the mistake of quoting willie-waught as one word in the following lines:—

Gude e'en to you a', and tak your nappy,
A "willywaught," a gude night cappy.

The word is introduced with fine effect in a translation from the Gaelic, by the Ettrick Shepherd, of the Jacobite Ballad, "The Frasers in the Correi":—

Spier na at me!
Gae spier at the maiden that sits by the sea,
The red coats were here, and it was na for good,
And the ravens are hoarse in "the waughting" o' blood.
And meantime gies a waught o' caller whey,
The day's been hot, and we are wondrous dry.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

I'm sure 'twill do us meikle guid, a waucht
o' caller air,
A caller douk, a caller breeze, and caller fish and fare.

—WHISTLE BINKIE: Down the Water.

Wauk, to render the palm of the hand hard, callous, or horny, by severe toil.

I held on high my waunkit loof,
To swear by a' yon starry roof,
That henceforth I wad be rhyme proof,
Till my last breath.

—BURNS: The Vision.

Waukrife, watchful, wakeful, unable to sleep; the suffix rife, as in cauldrife, very cold, is used as an intensitive, so that waukrife signifies not only unable to sleep, but unable in an intense degree.

What time the moon, wi' silent glower,
Sets up her horn,
Wail through the dreary midnight hour,
Till waukrife morn.

—BURNS: Elegy on Captain Matthew Henderson.

'Tis hopeless love an' dark despair,
Cast by the glamour o' thine e'e,
That clouds my waukrife dreams wi' care,
An' maks the daylight dark to me.

—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Waullics or waulies. Jamieson defines waullics as meaning the intestines. The word is not to be confounded with waly or walie, choice, large, ample, as Burns uses it.

But mark the rustic haggis-fed,
The trembling earth resounds his tread;
Clap in his walie nieve a blade,
He'll mak it whistle.

—TO A HAGGIS.

In "Jacob and Rachel," a song attributed to Burns, published in an anonymous London edition of his songs, dated 1825, the word occurs in the following stanza:—

Then Rachel, calm as ony lamb,
She claps him on the waulies,
Quo' she, "ne'er fash a woman's clash."

In this song, omitted on account of its grossness from nearly all editions of his works, the word is not susceptible of the meaning attributed to it by Jamieson, nor of that in the poem in praise of "The Haggis." Jamieson has the obsolete word wally, a billow, a wave, which affords a clue to its derivation.

The name of weaulie was given to the hips or posteriors on account of their round and wavy form, as appears from the synonymous words in Gaelic—tonn, a wave, and ton, the breech. The idea is involved in the words, now seldom used, which are cited by Jamieson, wallie-drag, and wallie-draggie, signifying a woman who is corpulent and heavy behind, and makes but slow progress in walking. The connection with wallies, intestines, as rendered by Jamieson, is exceedingly doubtful.

Waur, worse. To waur, or warr, to conquer, to give an enemy the worst of the conflict; from worst, to put a person in the wrong, or in a worse position.

Up and waur them a', Willie.

—Jacobite Ballad.

An advocate was complaining to his friend, an eminent legal functionary of the last century, that his claims to a judgeship had been overlooked, adding acrimoniously, "And I can tell you, they might have got a waur," to which the only answer was a grave "cohaur?"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Sax thousand years are near hand fled,
Sin I was to the butcherin' bred,
And mony a scheme in vain's been laid

To stop or scaur me,
Till ane Hornbook's ta'en up the trade,
An faith he'll waur me.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Want o' wit is waur than want o' wealth.

In his case, the water will never waur the widdie.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

(i.e., in his case the water will never get the better of the gallows; equivalent to the English saying, "He that's born to be hanged will never be drowned").

Wax, to grow, or increase; the reverse of wane, to decrease.

Wax is almost obsolete; but wane survives, both in Scotland and England, as in the phrases: "the waning moon," "the waning year," "his waning fortunes." Wax remains as a Biblical word, in the noble translations of the Old Testament by Wickliffe and the learned divines of the reign of James I., which has preserved to this age so many emphatic words of ancient English, which might otherwise have perished. It is derived from the German wachsen; the Flemish wassen, to grow.

The man wax well nigh wud for ire.

—CHAUCER.

And changing empires wane and wax,
Are founded, flourish and decay.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Translation of Dies Irae.

Wazie, jolly, brisk; probably a variation for gaucie (q.v.), with the common change of g into w, as in war for guerre, &c.

Right wazie wax'd an' fou' o' fun,
They whistled down the setting sun.

—BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Wean, a little child; a weanie, a very little child—from "wee ane," little one. This word has not yet been admitted to the dictionaries, though becoming common in English parlance.

A smytie o' wee duddie weans
(a lot of little ragged children).
—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

When skirlin' weanies see the light.
—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Wearin' awa', decaying gradually.

I'm wearin' awa', Jean,
Like snaw when it's thaw, Jean,
I'm wearin' awa'
To the Land o' the Leal.
—LADY NAIRNE.

Hope's star will rise when
Life's welkin grows grey,
We feel that within us which ne'er can decay,
And Death brings us Life as the Night brings the Daw' [dawn],
Though we're wearin' awa', an'
we're wearin' awa'.
—JAMES BALLANTINE.

Weatherie, stormy or showery weather; a word formed on the same principle as the Teutonic ungewitter, very bad weather. Weather gleam, a streak of light on the horizon in cloudy weather.

Wee, little, diminutive, very little; generally supposed to be derived from the first syllable of the German wenig. This word occurs in Shakspeare, and is common in colloquial and familiar English, though not in literary composition. It is often used as an intensification of littleness, as "a little wee child," "a little wee bit."

A wee house well filled,
A wee farm well tilled,
A wee wife well willed,
Mak' a happy man.

A wee mouse can creep under a great haystack.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Weed or weeds, dress, attire, clothing. The only remnant of this word remaining in modern English is the phrase, a "widow's weeds," the funeral attire of a recently bereaved widow.

They saw their bodies bare,
Anon they pass'd with all their speed,
Of beaver to mak themselves a weed,
To cleith (clothe) them was their care.
—On the Creation and Paradyce Lost, by SIR RICHARD MAITLAND, in ALLAN RAMSAY'S Evergreen.

Weed is in many Etymological Dictionaries said to be derived from weave, the Teutonic weben. Possibly it comes from the Gaelic or eudadh, a dress or garment, also the armour of a knight. The author of the Scottish poem of "Paradyce Lost," which appears in the "Evergreen," was born in 1496, and died in 1586, at the advanced age of 90, and was consequently long anterior to Milton, who afterwards adopted the same title, and rendered it as enduring as the English language.

Weeder-clips, shears for clipping weeds.

The rough burr thistle spreading wide
Among the bearded bear,
I turned the weeder-clips aside
And spared the symbol dear.
—BURNS.

The patriotic poet turned the clips aside in order that he might not cut down a thistle, the floral badge of his country.

Weeks or weiks of the eye or mouth signify, according to Jamieson, the corners of the mouth or eyes. To hang by the weeks of his mouth, is to keep hold of a thing or purpose to the utmost, to the last gasp; an exaggerated phrase similar to that in Holy Writ to "escape by the skin of the teeth." Week or weik is a corruption of the Gaelic uig, a corner. The word occurs in Tim Bobbin's Yorkshire Glossary.

Weigh-bauk, the cross beam of a balance.

Come like a weigh-bauk, Donald MacGillivray,
Come like a weigh-bauk, Donald MacGillivray,
Balance them fairly, balance them cleverly,
Off wi' the counterfeit, Donald MacGillivray.
—JAMES HOGG, the Ettrick Shepherd.

Weil or wele, an eddy in the water; a whirlpool.

Weil-head, the centre of an eddy. These words appear to be a corruption of wheel or whirl, having a circular motion, and to have no connection with well, a spring of water.

They doukit in at a weil-head.
—Border Minstrelsy: Earl Richard.

Weill, good fortune, the English weal, as in the phrase, "Come weal, come woe."

He is na worth the weill that canna thole the wae.—Old Proverb.

Weir, war; wierman, a soldier, a man of war, a combatant; wierlike, warlike; weirigills, quarrels; wedded weirigills, disputes between husband and wife; from the French guerre, the Italian guerra, with the change of the gu into w. The primary root seems to be the Flemish weeren, to defend; the English be ware / i.e., be ready to defend yourself;—a noble origin for resistance to oppressive and defensive war, that does not apply to offensive war—the "bella, horrida bella," of the Latin, and the krieg of the Teutonic, which signify war generally, whether offensive or defensive;—the first a crime, the second a virtue.

Weir or wear, to guard, to watch over, to protect, to gather in with caution, as a shepherd conducts his flock to the fold.

Erlinton had a fair daughter;
I wat he wiered her in a great sin,
And he has built a high bower,
And a' to put that lady in.
—Ballad of Erlinton.

Motherwell translates "wiered her in a great sin," placed her in danger of committing a great sin, which is clearly not the meaning. But the whole ballad is hopelessly corrupt in his version.

Weird or wierd. Most English dictionaries misdefine this word, which has two different significations: one as a noun, the other as an adjective. In English literature, from Shakespeare's time downwards, it exists as an adjective only, and is held to mean unearthly, ghastly, or witch-like. Before Shakspeare's time, and in Scottish poetry and parlance to the present day, the word is a noun, and signifies "fate" or "destiny"—derived from the Teutonic werden, to become, or that which shall be. Chaucer, in "Troilus and Cresida," has the line—

O Fortune! executrice of wierdes!

and Gower, in a manuscript in the possession of the Society of Antiquaries, says—

It were a wondrous wierde
To see a king become a herde.

In this sense the word continues to be used in Scotland:

A man may woo where he will, but he maun wed where his wierd is.

She is a wise wife that kens her ain wierd.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Betide me weel, betide me woe,
That wierd shall never danton me.
—Ballad of True Thomas.

The wierd her dearest bairn befel
By the bonnie mill-dams o' Binnorie.
—SCOTT'S Minstrelsy of the Border.

Shakspeare seems to have been the first to employ the word as an adjective, and to have given it the meaning of unearthly, though pertaining to the idea of the Fates:—

The wierd sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land.
—Macbeth.

Thane of Cawdor! by which title these wierd sisters saluted me.—Idem.

When we sat by her flickering fire at night she was most wierd.—CHARLES DICKENS: Great Expectations.

No spot more fit than wierd, lawless Winchelsea, for a plot such as he had conceived.—All the Year Round, April 2, 1870.

It opened its great aisles to him, full of whispering stillness, full of wierd effects of light.—Blackwood's Magazine, April 1870.

Jasper surveyed his companion as though he were getting imbued with a romantic interest in his wierd life.—CHARLES DICKENS: The Mystery of Edwin Drood.

She turned to make her way from the wierd spot as fast as her feeble limbs would let [permit] her.—T. A. TROLLOPE: The Dream Numbers.

Wierd is sometimes (but rarely) used as a verb, signifying to doom.

I wierd ye to a fiery beast,
And relieved sall ye never be.
Border Minstrelsy: Kempion.

Weise, to direct, to guide, to draw or lead on in the way desired. This word is akin to the English wise, a way or manner, as in the phrase, "Do in that wise," and in the word likewise, in a like manner, and is derived from the French viser and the Dutch and Flemish wijzen or wyzen, to indicate, to show or point the way.

Every miller wad weise the water to his ain mill.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Weise also signifies to use policy for attaining any object, to turn to art rather than by strength, to draw or let out anything cautiously so as to prevent it from breaking, as in making a rope of tow or straw one is said to weise out the tow or straw.—JAMIESON.

The wean saw something like a white leddy that weiseid by the gate.—SCOTT:
The Monastery.

Wem, a scar; wemmit, scarred, wemless, unscarred; and, metaphorically, blameless or immaculate. Probably from the Flemish and English wen, a tumour or swelling on the skin.

Wersh, insipid, tasteless; from the Gaelic uiris, poor, worthless, trashy.

A kiss and a drink o' water are but a wersh disjune.—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Why do ye no sup your parritch? I dinna like them; they're unco wersh. Gie me a wee pickle saut!—JAMIESON.

That auld Duke James lost his heart before he lost his head, and the Worcester man was but wersh parritch, neither gude to fry, boil, nor keep cauld.—SCOTT: Old Mortality.

The word was English in the seventeenth century, but is now obsolete, except in some of the Northern Counties, where it survives, according to Brocket's Glossary, in the corrupted form of welah.

Her pleasures wersh, and her amours tasteless.—Translation of Montaigne, 1613.

Helicon's wersh well.—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Wet one's whistle. Whistle is a ludicrous name for the throat, whence to "wet one's whistle" signifies to moisten the throat or take a drink.

But till we meet and sweet our whistle, Tak' this excuse for nae epistle.

—BURNS: To Hugh Parker.

Whalp, to bring forth young dogs or whelps. Burns says of Cæsar, the Newfoundland dog in his well-known poem of the "Twa Dogs" that he was—

Whalpit some place far abroad,
Where sailors gang to fish for cod.

The Jacobite ballad-singers and popular poets of the '45, when Prince Charles Edward made his forlorn but gallant attempt to regain the throne of his ancestors, made frequent derogatory and contemptuous allusions to the family name of the House of Hanover, which they persisted in calling Whelp instead of Guelph.

Now our good king abroad is gone,
A German whelp now fills the throne,
Whelps that are desired by none,
They're brutes compared wi' Charlie.

Oh, Charlie, come an' lead the way,
No German whelp shall bear the sway;
Though ilka dog maun hae his day,
The right belongs to Charlie.

—PETER BUCHAN'S Prince Charlie and Flora Macdonald.

Whalpit is the past tense of the verb to whelp, or bring forth whelps or young dogs. In Dutch and Flemish, welp signifies the cub of the lion or the bear, but in Scotch and English the word, though formerly applied to the progeny of the wolf and the fox, is now almost exclusively confined to that of the dog. Dr. Wagner, in his Glossary to the German edition of Burns, conjectures that the word is derivable from the Latin vulpes.

Whang, a large slice, also a thong of leather, and by extension of meaning, to beat with a strap or thong, or to beat generally.

Wi' sweet-milk cheese i' mony a whang,
And farlies baked wi' butter.

—BURNS: Holy Fair.

Ye cut large whangs out of other folk's leather.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Whang, in the sense of to beat with a strap, is local in England, but in the sense of a large slice, or anything large, it is peculiar to Scotland; and in one odd phrase, that of slang-whanger, to the United States of America. According to Bartlett's "Dictionary of Americanisms" it signifies political vituperation largely intermingled with slang words. It appears, however, in Hood's "Ode to Rae Wilson:"—

No part I take in party fray
With tropes from Billingsgate's slang-whanger Tartars.

To which Mr. Bartlett appends the note, "If the word, as is supposed, be of American origin, it has been adopted in the mother country."

This day the Kirk kicks up a stour,
Nae mair the knaves shall wrang her;
For Heresy is in her power,
And gloriously she'll whang her,

Wi' pith this day.

—BURNS: The Ordination.

The Glossaries translate whang, by beat, belabour; but it is probably derived from the Teutonic weanke, the Flemish wankden, to shake, to totter, to stagger, or cause to shake and stagger.

What ails ye at? This question signifies, what is the matter with a thing named? What dislike have you to it? as to a child that does not eat its breakfast, "What ails ye at your parritch!"

Lord Rutherford having, when on a ramble on the Pentlands, complained to a shepherd of the mist, which prevented him from enjoying the scenery, the shepherd, a tall grim figure, turned sharply round upon him. "What ails ye at the mist, sir? It weets the sod, slockens the yowes, and"—adding with more solemnity—"it is God's wull."—DEAN RAMSAY.

An old servant who took charge of everything in the family, having observed that his master thought that he had drank wine with every lady at the table, but had overlooked one, jogged his memory with the question, "What ails ye at her wi' the green gown?"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Whaup, a curlew.

The wild land-fowls are plovers, pigeons, curlews, commonly called whaup.—Statistical Account of Scotland, article OKKNEY.

Whaup-nebbit, having a nose like the neb or bill of a curlew.

Wheen, a lot, a small quantity.

What better could be expected o' a wheen pock-pudding English folk?—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

A young girl (say at St. Andrews) sat upon the cutty stool for breach of the seventh commandment, which applies to adultery as well as to the minor, but still heinous, offence of illicit love, was asked who was the father of her child? "How can I tell," she replied artlessly, "among a wheen o' divinity students?"—DEAN RAMSAY.

But in my bower there is a wake,

And at the wake there is a wane;
But I'll come to the green wood ere morn.

—Border Minstrelsy: Evilution.

Wane means a number of people, a wheen folk.—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

The derivation, which has been much disputed, seems fairly traceable to the Teutonic wenig, little or few.

Wheep, a sharp, shrill cry or whistle. Penny-wheep, a contemptuous designation for sour, weak, small beer, sold at a penny per quart or pint, and dear at the money; so called, it is supposed, from its acidity, causing the person who swallows it, thinking it better than it is, to make a kind of whistling sound, expressive of his surprise and disgust. Formed on the same principle as the modern word "penny dreadful," applied to a certain description of cheap and offensive literature. Wheep seems to be akin to whoop, a shrill cry, and whaup, the cry of the curlew or plover.

Be't whisky gill or penny-wheep,
Or ony stronger potion,
It never fails, on drinking deep,
To kittle up our notion.

—BURNS: The Holy Fair.

Wheuple, the cheep or low cry of a bird; also, metaphorically, the ineffectual attempt of a man to whistle loudly.

A Scottish gentleman, who visited England for the first time, and ardently desired to return home to his native hills and moors, was asked by his English host to come out into the garden at night to hear the song of the nightingale, a bird unknown in Scotland. His mind was full of home, and he exclaimed, "Na, na! I wadna gie the wheuple o' a whaup (curlew) for a' the nightingales that ever sang."—Statistical Account of Scotland.

Wheericken or queerikens, a ludicrous term applied to children who are threatened with punishment, signifying the two sides of the breech or podex, the soft place appropriate for "skelping." Apparently derived from the Gaelic ciùrr, to hurt, to cause pain.

Whid or whud, an untruth, a falsehood, a lie; usually applied to a departure from veracity which is the result of sudden invention or caprice, rather than of malicious premeditation.

Even ministers they hae been kenn'd,
In holy rapture,
A rousin' whid at times to vend,
An' nail't wi' Scripture.

—BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

In the first edition of Burns the word whid did not appear, but instead of it—

Even ministers they hae been kenn'd,
In holy rapture,
Great lies and nonsense baith to vend,
And nail't wi' Scripture.

This was ungrammatical, as Burns himself recognised it to be, and amended the line by the more emphatic form in which it now appears.

The word whid seems, in its primary meaning, to be applied to any sudden and rapid movement, or to a deviation from the straight line. It is akin to the English scud. According to Jamieson, to yed is to fib, to magnify in narration. This word is probably a variety or hetero-graphy of whid, and has the same meaning.

An arrow whidderan !
—The Song of the Outlaw
Murray.

Paitricks scaichin' loud at e'en,
An' mornin' poussie whiddin' seen.
[Partridges screeching, and the early hare scudding along.]

—BURNS: To Lapraik.

Connected with the idea of rapidity of motion are the words whidder, a gust of wind; whiddie, a hare; whiddy, unsteady, shifting, unstable; to whiddie, to move rapidly and lightly; to twidder the thumbs, in English twiddle the thumbs. The derivation is uncertain, but is probably from the Teutonic weit, the English wide, in which sense whid, a falsehood, would signify something wide of the truth, and would also apply in the sense of rapid motion through the wide-ness of space.

Whid, a lie. Bailey has "whids, many words"—a cant word, he says. Does not Burns speak of amorous whids, meaning, or rather I should say referring to, the quick rapid jumpings about of rabbits? Whid certainly has in Scotch the meaning of frisking about; and applied to statements, it is obvious how whid could come to mean a lie.—R. DRENNAN.

Whigmaleeries, whims, caprices, crotchets, idle fancies; also fanciful articles of jewellery and personal adornment, toys and trifles of any kind.

There'll be, if that day come,
I'll wad a boddle,
Some fewer whigmaleeries in your noddle.
—BURNS: The Briggs of Ayr.

I met ane very fain, honest, fair-spoken, weel-put-on gentleman, or rather burgher, as I think, that was in the whigmaleerie man's back-shop.—SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel.

The etymology of this word, which is peculiar to Scotland, is not to be found in any of the current languages of Europe. It is probably from the Gaelic uige, a jewel, a precious stone; from whence uigheam, adornment, decoration; uigheach, abounding in precious stones; and uigheamaich, to adorn. These words are the roots of the obsolete English word ouches, a jewel, used by Shakspeare, Beaumont and Fletcher; and which also occurs in the authorised version of the Bible:—

Your brooches, pearls, and ouches.
Henry IV., Part II.

Pearls, bracelets, rings, or ouches,
Or what she can desire.

—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

The last two syllables of whigmaleerie are traceable to leor or leoir, sufficient, plenty. The quotation from the "Fortunes of Nigel" refers to the jewels in George Heriot's shop. The connection of ideas between the fanciful articles in a jeweller's shop and the fancies or conceits of a capricious mind is sufficiently obvious.

Jamieson notices a game called whigmaleeries, "formerly played at drinking-clubs in Angus, at which the losing player was obliged to drink off a glass. Perhaps," he adds, "the game was so denominated out of contempt for the severe austerity attributed to the Whigs!"

"This etymology," says Dr. Adolphus Wagner, "is very doubtful and difficult." Confused by the word Whig, and unaware of the Gaelic uige, and believing in the drinking bouts alluded to by Jamieson, he endeavours to account for the final syllable, erie, by citing from Ben Jonson, "a leer horse," a led horse, as applicable to a drunkard being led in the train of another! The Gaelic derivation makes an end of the absurdities both of Jamieson and the erudite foreign critic.

Whilie, a little while; pronounced fylie in Aberdeenshire. A wee whilie, a very little while; whiles, at times.

On the Bishop (Skinner) making his appearance, the honest man (a crofter) in the gladness of his heart stepped briskly forward to welcome his pastor, but in his haste stepped upon the rim of the iron riddle, which rebounded with great force against one of his shins. The accident made him suddenly pull up, and instead of completing the reception, he stood vigorously rubbing the injured limb, and, not daring in such a venerable presence to give vent to the customary strong ejaculations, kept twisting his face into all sorts of grimaces. As was natural, the Bishop went forward, uttering the usual formulas of condolence and sympathy, the patient meanwhile continuing his rubbings and his silent but expressive contortions. At last his wife, Janet, came to the rescue, and clapping the Bishop coaxingly on the back, said, "Noo, Bishop, just gang ben to the house, and we'll follow when he's had time to curse a fylie; and then, I'se warrant, he'll be weel enouch."—DEAN RAMSAY.

Whyles she sank, and whyles she swam,
Binnorie, O Binnorie!
Until she cam to the miller's dam,
By the bonnie mill-dam o' Binnorie.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Cruel Sister.

Whillie-lu, a threnody, a lament, a prolonged strain of melancholy music; but, according to Jamieson, "a dull or flat air." He derives the word from the Icelandic hvella, to sound; and lu, lassitude. It seems, however, to be a corruption of waly! an exclamation of sorrow; as in the beautiful ballad—

O waly! waly! up the bank,
And waly! waly! down the brae;

which, conjoined with the Gaelic luaidh (dh silent), a beloved object, makes whillie-lu, or waly lu. The final syllable lu enters into the composition of the English lullaby, a cradle-song, from lu-lu! beloved one, and baigh, sleep, which thus signifies "Sleep, beloved one!" or "Sleep, darling!"

Whillie-wa', to procrastinate; apparently from while away the time.

Whillie-whallie, sometimes abbreviated into whillie-whoa. This word in all its variations signifies any thing or person connected with cheaters, cajolers, or false pretenders. Jamieson has whilly or whully, to cheat, to gull; whillie-whallie, to coax, to wheedle; whillie-whoa, one not to be depended upon; whillie- wea, or whillie-whal, one who deals in ambiguous promises. In a South Sea song which appears in Allan Ramsay's "Tea-Table Miscellany" occur the lines—

If ye gang near the South Sea House,
The whilly-whas will grip your gear!

The etymology of all these words is uncertain. The English wheelde has been suggested, but does not meet the necessities, while wheelde itself requires explanation. Whillie-whallie, which appears to be the original form of the word, is probably the Gaelic uilleadh, oily, and, metaphorically, specious, as in the English phrase, an oily hypocrite, applied to a man with a smooth or specious tongue, which he uses to cajole and deceive, and balaoch, in the aspirated form, bhalaoch, a fellow. Fromthence whillie-whallie, a specious, cajoling, hypocritical person.

Burns, in "The Whistle," speaks of one of the personages of the ballad as—Craigdarroch began with a tongue smooth as oil,

Desiring Glenriddel to yield up the spoil.

Whilper or whulper, any individual or thing of unusual size; akin to the English whopper and whopping, of which it may possibly be a corruption.

The late Rev. Rowland Hill, preaching a charity sermon in Wapping, appealed to the congregation to contribute liberally. His text was, "Charity covereth a multitude of sins." "I preach," he said, "to great sinners, to mighty sinners,—ay, and to whapping sinners!"—JOE MILLER'S Jest Book.

What a whilper of a trout I hae gotten!
—JAMIESON.

Whinge, to whine; from the Teutonic winseln, to whimper.

If ony Whiggish whingin' sot
To blame poor Matthew dare, man,
May dool and sorrow be his lot,
For Matthew was a rare man.
—BURNS: Elegy on Captain Matthew Henderson.

Whinger, a knife worn on the person, and serviceable as a sword or dagger in a sudden broil or emergency. Jamieson derives it from the Icelandic hwin, fununculus, and gird, actio; and queries whether it may not mean an escape for secret deeds. The Gaelic uinich signifies haste, and geur, sharp, whence uin geur or uinich geur, a sharp weapon for haste. The word is sometimes written whinyard, and is so used in the English poem of "Hudibras," and explained by the commentators as a hanger or hanging sword. It is, of course, open to doubt whether whinger is not the same as hanger, but the Gaelic derivation seems preferable, as expressive of a definite idea, while hanger admits of a multiplicity of meanings.

And whingers now in friendship bare,
The social meal to part and share,
Had found a bloody sheath.

—SCOTT: Lay of the Last Minstrel.

Mony tyne the half-mark whinger for the halfpennie whang. [Many lose the sixpenny knife for sake of the halfpenny slice.]—FERGUSON'S Scots Proverbs.

Joeteleg was another name for a whinger, which, though susceptible of a Gaelic interpretation (see ante), perhaps only signified a hunting-knife or dagger, from the Flemish jacht, the chase or hunt, and dolk, a dagger, pronounced in two syllables, dol-ok, a hunting-knife or dagger, a jacht-dolk or joeteleg. But whether the Gaelic or the Flemish origin of the word be correct, it is clear that Jamieson's derivation from the imaginary cutler, Jacques de Liege, is untenable.

Whinner, to dry up, like vegetation in a long-protracted drought. The derivation is uncertain; probably a corruption of the English winnow.

A whinnerin' drouth. The word is applied to anything so much dried up, in consequence of extreme drought, as to rustle to the touch. The corn's a whinnerin'.—JAMIESON.

Whinner, to snort like a horse, to whinney; French hennir, to neigh.

An' goblins whinnered through the air
Wi' whorled chaps (distorted faces or jaws).

—GEORGE BEATTIE: John o' Arnha'.

Whipper-snapper, a contemptuous term for a little, presumptuous person, who gives himself airs of importance and talks too much. Jamieson says it "might be deduced from the Icelandic hwipp, saltus, celer cursus, and snapa, captare escam, as originally denoting one who manifested the greatest alacrity in snatching at a morsel!" The true derivation seems to be from the Flemish wippen, to move about rapidly and restlessly, and snapper, to prate, to gabble, to be unnecessarily loquacious.

Whippert, hasty, irascible, impatient; whippert-like, inclining to be ill-tempered without adequate provocation. Jamieson thinks the root of whippert is either the Icelandic whopa, lightness, inconstancy, or the English whip. He does not cite the Flemish wip, to shake in the balance, and wippen, to move lightly and rapidly as the scales do on the slightest excess of weight over the even balance. Thus whippert-like would signify one easily provoked to lose the balance of his temper.

He also cites whipper tooties, as silly scruples about doing anything, and derives it from the French apres tout, after all. This derivation is worse than puerile. The first word is evidently from the Flemish root; the second, tooties, is not so easily to be accounted for.

Whish, whist, silence, or to keep silence; whence the name of the well-known game at cards, formerly called quadrille.

Haud your whish (i.e., keep silence, or hold your tongue).—SCOTT: Rob Roy.

Whisky, whusky, a well-known alcoholic drink, of which the name is derived from the Gaelic uisge, water. The liquor is sometimes called in the Highlands uisge beatha, the water of life; in Irish Gaelic written uisque baugh. The French pay the same complement to brandy, when they call it eau de vie.

Whisky tackets, pimples produced on the face by the excessive use of whisky or other spirituous liquors; from tacket, a small nail.

Whistle binkie, a musician, harper, fiddler, or piper who played at penny weddings or other social gatherings, and trusted for his remuneration to the generosity of the company. A whistle is a somewhat irrelevant name for a pipe, or for music generally, and binkie is a bench, a bunker, or seat. It has been supposed that these two words were the etymological roots of the phrase, but this derivation is open to doubt. Uasal, the Gaelic for gentle or noble, and binkie, a bunker, a seat, was the seat reserved at the weddings of the peasantry for the chief or landlord, who graced the ceremony by his presence when any of his tenants were married, and the place of honour thus appropriated to him was called the usal (corrupted into whistle) binkie, and the epithet was thence transferred to the hired musician who stepped into it after the laird's departure. The late David Robertson of Glasgow published, in 1847 and 1853, a collection of Scottish songs by then living Scottish poets under this title, of which the contents proved what was previously known, that the genius of Scotsmen, even among the humblest classes, is pre-eminently lyrical, and produces many effusions of great poetical beauty.

Whistle kirk, a term of contempt applied by bigoted Calvinists and Puritans, who object to all music in churches except the human voice, to Episcopalian and other Protestant churches who make use of organs. That noble instrument is a far greater incentive to devotional feeling than the untrained singing, which is often little better than howling or braying of a miscellaneous congregation of old and young people who know nothing of music and have never been taught to sing in unison. A whistle-kirk minister is a contemptuous epithet for an Episcopalian clergyman.

Whitter, to move quickly, to talk quickly, to drink quickly a hearty draught. The etymology is uncertain, but is possibly allied to the English whet, the Dutch and Flemish wetten, the German wetzen, to sharpen.

Whitterin' down the stair.

—JAMIESON.

Syne we'll sit down and tak' our whitter
 To cheer our heart,
 And faith we'll be acquainted better
 Before we part.
 —BURNS: Epistle to Lapraik.

Whittle, a clasp-knife; to whittle,
 to chip or carve a stick.

A Sheffield thwittle bare he in his hose.
 —CHAUCER: The Reeve's Tale.

Gudeman, quoth he, put up your whittle,
 I'm no designed to try its mettle.
 —BURNS: Death and Doctor Hornbook.

The word is common in the United States, and was scarcely understood in England until its introduction into humorous literature by Judge Haliburton of Nova Scotia, in the inimitable "Sam Slick, the Clockmaker." According to a ballad quoted by Mr. Bartlett, in his Dictionary of Americanisms, the "Yankie or New Englander will whittle or cut his way through the world by some 'cute device or other, in spite of difficulties."

Dexterity with the pocket-knife is part of a Nantucket education. I am inclined to think the propensity is national. Americans must and will whittle." —N. P. WILLIS.

Whommle, to turn over clumsily and suddenly, and with a loud noise; transposition of whelm.

Coming to the fire with the said pan and water therein, and casting the water therefrom, and whommeling the pan upon the fire, with the pronouncing of these fearful words, "Bones to the fire and soul to the devil!" which accomplished the cure. —Trial of Alison Nisbet for Witchcraft, 1632.

Whommle means something different from whelm. Whelm means to cover over, to immerse; neither does whommle mean to turn over clumsily and suddenly with a loud noise. Not one of these ideas is conveyed by the word itself; it means literally and really nothing more than to turn upside down. —R. DRENNAN.

Whully, to wheedle, to endeavour, to circumvent by fair words and flattery; in modern English slang to carny. Wully-wha-ing, insincere flattery.

My life precious! exclaimed Meg Dods, nane o' your wully-wha-ing, Mr. Bindloose. Diel ane wad miss the auld ginning ale wife, Mr. Bindloose, unless it were here and there a poor body, and may be the auld house tyke that wadna be sae weel guided, puir fallow. —SCOTT: St. Ronan's Well.

Whulte, a blow or hurt from a fall; Gaelic buaillte (aspirated bhuailte or vuaillte), preterite of buaill, to strike a blow.

Whuppie, a term of angry contumely applied to a girl or woman, signifying that she deserves whipping.

Whurlie-burlye. This Scottish word seems to be the original of the English hurly-burly, and signifies rapid circular motion; from whorl, a small wheel; whirl, to spin round; world, the earth that rotates or whirls in space around the sun.

Whyles, sometimes, occasionally, now and then.

How best o' chieles are whyles in want,
 While coofs in countless thousands rant.
 —BURNS: Epistle to Davie, a Brother Poet.

Whyles crooning o'er some auld Scotch sonnet.

—Tam o' Shanter.

I took his body on my back,
And whiles I gaed, and whiles I sat.
—Lament of the Border Widow.

A lady, visiting the poor, in the West Port, Edinburgh, not far from the church established by Dr. Chalmers, asked a poor woman if she ever attended divine service there. She replied, "Ou ay! there's a man ca'd Chalmers preaches there, and I whiles gang in to hear him, just to encourage him—puir body!"—DEAN RAMSAY.

Whylock, or a wee while, a little while.

Wi' a blush, as she keepit lookin' roun'
an' roun' for a whylock.—Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Widdie, angry contention; widdie-fu', cross-grained, ill-tempered, half-crazy, cantankerous, angry without cause.

The miller was strappin', the miller was ruddy,
A heart like a lord, and a hue like a lady;
The laird was a widdie-fu', bleerit knurl,— She's left the gude fellow and taken the churl.

—BURNS: Meg o' the Mill.

Misled by the meaning of widdie, the rope, or gallows, Jamie-son says that, properly widdie-fu', or widdie-fow, signifies one who deserves to fill a halter. But as a man may be peevish, morose, irascible, contentious, and unreasonable without deserving the gallows, the etymology is not satisfactory. The true root seems to be the Flemish woede, the German wuth, the old English wode, the Scottish wud—all signifying mad, crazy, unreasonable.

Widdle, to turn, to wheel, to wriggle; and metaphorically, to struggle; akin to the English twiddle, to turn the thumbs round each other in idle movement. Widdle is from the Gaelic cuidhil, a wheel.

Hale be your heart, hale be your fiddle,
Lang may your elbuck jink and diddle
To cheer you through the weary widdle
O' worldly cares.

—BURNS: Epistle to Davie.

Widdy (sometimes written woodie and wuddie), the gallows.

The water will nae wrang the widdy.

[The English have another version of this proverb—

He who's born to be hanged will never be drowned.]

It's nae laughing to girn in a widdy.

It's ill speaking o' the widdy in the house o' a man who was hangit.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

The French have a similar proverb—"Il ne faut pas parler de corde dans la maison d'un pendu."

He'll wintle in a widdie yet [he'll wriggle in a rope yet, i.e., he'll be hanged].—JAMIESON: Scots Proverb.

Her Joe had been a Highland laddie,
But weary fa' the wae-fu' woodie.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

On Donald Caird the doom was stern,
Craig to tether, leg to airn,
But Donald Caird wi' muckle study
Caught the gift to cheat the wuddie.
Rings o' airn an' bolts o' steel
Fell like ice frae hand and heel,
Watch the sheep in fauld and glen,
Donald Caird's come again.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

In very primitive times in Scotland the ropes used for hanging those who had offended the chief, or who had rendered themselves amenable to the death penalty, were formed of twisted willow withes—whence withy, or widdy, afterwards came to signify a rope, or, by extension of meaning, the gallows.

Wight, wicht, wichty, wichty, wichtness. Wight remains an English word in mock heroic composition, and means a man, a fellow; originally, a strong or brave man, a sturdy fellow. The Dutch and Flemish wicht means a child or a little fellow. Wight, in the epithet "Wallace wight," given in Scottish poetry and tradition to the great national hero, means "brave Wallace," and was a kind of title of nobility bestowed on him for his prowess, and the patriotic use he made of it.

A wight man never wanted a weapon.
—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Willie-wa', to cajole, to flatter, possibly from wile away; from wile, to trick, to beguile.

Willie. This suffix answers in meaning to the Latin volens, or volent in the English words benevolent and malevolent. The Scotch renders the former word by guid-willie, or well-willie; from the Flemish goed willig; and the latter by ill-willie, in which ill is substituted for the Flemish quad, or bad. On the same principle of formation, ill-deedie signifies nefarious, and ill-tricky mischievous, both of which might well become English if they found favour with authors of acknowledged authority.

Willie-winkie, a term of somewhat contemptuous endearment to a diminutive and not over intelligent child. The Jacobites of 1688 to 1715 long applied it to William III., when they did not call him the "Dutchman," "the Hogan Mugan," "Willie the Wag," or "Willie Wanbeard." "The Last Will and Testament of Willie winkie," is the title of a once popular Jacobite song.

Wilshoch, wulshoch, changeable of opinion or purpose, a bashful wooer. Jamieson derives the first syllable from the English will, and the second from the Anglo-Saxon seoc aeger, sick from the indulgence of one's own will. It seems rather to be from the Gaelic uile, all, totally; and seog (shog), to swing from side to side—whence, metaphorically, one who is continually at variance with his former opinion, and sways from side to side.

Wilt, to shrivel, or begin to decay, as a leaf or flower in the extreme heat or cold—not exactly withered in the English sense of the word, inasmuch as a wilted leaf may revive, but a withered one cannot. This old Scottish word has been revived in America, where it is in common use. The late Artemus Ward punned upon it, when he said to his lady love, "Wilt thou? and she wilted."

Miss Amy pinned a flower to her breast, and when she died, she held the wilted fragments in her hand.—JUDG'S Margaret.

Wilt, though not admitted into the English dictionaries, is in local use in many northern and eastern counties, and is often pronounced wilk, or wilken, which seems to have been the original form; from the German, Dutch, and Flemish welken, to decay, to droop. Spenser used welk, in speaking of the sunset, to describe the fading light of the day.

When ruddy Phoebus 'gins to welk in west.—Faerie Queene.

Wimple, to flow gently like a brook, to meander, to purl.

Among the bonnie winding banks,
Where Doon rins wimplin' clear.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Win, this word in English signifies to gain, to make a profit, to acquire; but in the Scottish language it has many other and more extended meanings, such as to reach, to attain, to arrive, to get at. It enters into the composition of a great number of compound words and phrases, such as—to win above, to surmount; to win about, to circumvent; to win awa, to escape, and, poetically, to die, or escape from life; to win forret, to advance, to get on; to win owre, to get over, to cajole; to win past, to overtake, or get by; to win free, to get loose; to win hame, to get home; to win aff, to get off, or away, to be acquitted on a trial; to win ben, to be admitted to the house; to win up, to arise, or get up.

Win and tine, a man able to win and tine, is a man of substance and energy, able to win and able to lose without hurting himself, and to whom winnings and losings are alike of little consequence.

Winnock, a window corner; abridged from window-nook. Winnock-bunker, a seat, ledge, or bench at the window.

A winnock-bunker in the east,
Where sat Auld Nick in shape o' beast;
A towsie tyke, black, grim, and large,
To gie them music was his charge.

—BURNS: Tam o'Shanter.

Winsome. This pleasant Scottish word is gradually making good its claim to a place in recognised English. The etymology is undecided whether it be from win, to gain, or the Teutonic wonne, joy, pleasure, or delight.

I gat your letter, winsome Willie.

—BURNS.

She is a winsome wee thing,
She is a bonnie wee thing,
This sweet wee wife o' mine.

—BURNS.

Wintle, a corruption of windle, to gyrate, to turn round in the wind; also, to reel, to stagger, to walk unsteadily; also, to wriggle, to writhe, to struggle.

Thieves of every rank and station,
From him that wears the star and garter,
To him that wintles in a halter.

—BURNS: To J. Rankine.

He'll wintle in a widdle yet.

—JAMIESON.

Winze, an oath, a curse, an imprecation, an evil wish; from the Flemish wensch, a wish, which, conjoined with the prefix ver, became verwenschen, to curse, to wish evil.

He tak a swirlie auld moss-oak
For some black gruesome carline,
And loot a winze, and drew a stroke.

—BURNS: Hallowe'en.

Worry-cow, a bugbear, a goblin, or frightful object, a ghost; the devil; also a scarecrow.

Draggled sae 'mang muck and stanes,
They looked like worry-cows.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

The word was used by Scott, in "Guy Mannering," and is derived by Jamieson from the English "worry," and "to cow." Worry, however, seems to be a corruption of the Gaelic uruisg, which, according to Armstrong's Gaelic Dictionary, signified a "brownie," or goblin, who was supposed to haunt lonely dells, lakes, and waterfalls, and who could only be seen by those who had the "second sight." Ruddiman thought that the uruisg was called a "brownie" in the Lowlands, on account of the brown colour of the long hair which covered his body when he appeared to human eyes; but it is more probable that "brownie" was derived from the Gaelic bròn, sorrow or calamity. The attributes ascribed to the uruisg are similar to those of the "lubber fiend" of Milton.

The final syllable of worry-cow was sometimes written and pronounced carl, a fellow. According to Jamieson, cow, or kow, signified a hobgoblin, and to "play the kow," was to act the part of a goblin, to frighten fools and children.

Wisp, to currycomb a horse, or rub it with a wisp of straw.

A short horse is sune wispit (i.e., a little job is soon done).—Old Proverb.

Wissel, to exchange. Wissler, a money-changer; from the Flemish wissel, and geld wisselaar, a money-changer; the German wechsel. To wissel words, is to exchange words; usually employed in an angry sense, as in the English phrase, to "bandy words with one," the irritation preceding a quarrel.

Withershins, backwards, against the course of the sun. To pass the bottle withershins, or the wrong way, at table, is considered a breach of social etiquette. The word seems to be derived from the Teutonic wider, contrary, and sonne, the sun; or perhaps from wider, and sinn, sense; whence it would signify, in a "contrary sense." The word wider, corrupted in the Scotch into wither, enters into the composition of many German words, such as wider-spruch, contradiction; wider-sinn, nonsense; wider-stand, resistance.

The ancient Druids called a movement contrary to the course of the sun, car-tual. On this subject, apropos of the word withershins, a curious note appears in Armstrong's Gaelic Dictionary. "The Druids," he says, "on certain occasions moved three times round the stone circles, which formed their temples. In performing this ceremony, car-deise, they kept the circle on the right, and consequently moved from east to west. This was called the prosperous course; but the car-tual, or moving with the circle on the left, was deemed fatal or unprosperous, as being "contrary to the course of the sun."

The said Alison past thrice withershins about the bed, muttering out certain charms in unknown words.—Trial of Alison Nisbet for Witchcraft, 1632.

To be whipped round a circle withershins, or car-tual, would thus be considered peculiarly degrading, and probably, as the meaning of Gaelic words was perverted by the Saxon-speaking people, was the origin of the phrase, "to be whipped at the cart's tail."—Gaelic Etymology of the Languages of Western Europe.

Witter, to struggle, to fight, to strive in enmity; from the Teutonic wider, against, contrary to; wider-sacher, an antagonist; wider-sprechen, to contradict; Flemish weder-partij, an adversary, an opposing party.

To struggle in whatever way,—often for a subsistence; as, "I'm witterin awa'." A witterin body is one who is struggling with poverty or difficulty.—JAMIESON.

Wittering, a proof.

And that was to be a wittering true,
That maiden she had gane.

—Border Minstrelsy: The Broom-field Hill.

Witterly, knowingly, wittingly; to do a thing witterly, to act on good information, or with full knowledge; to witter, to inform, and also to prognosticate.

Wod or wud, stark mad, raging mad; old English woode, wouth, and wouth; Dutch and Flemish woode; German wuth.

Ye haud a stick in the wod man's e'e,
i.e., you hold a stick in the mad man's eyes, or you continue to provoke one already enraged.—JAMIESON.

When neebors anger at a plea,
And just as wud as wud can be,
How easy can the barley bree
Cement the quarrel.

—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

The wife was wud, and out o' her wit,
She couldna gang, nor could she sit;
But aye she cursed and banned.

—The Gaberlunzie Man.

Won, to dwell, to reside, to inhabit. Woning, a dwelling-place. From the German wohnen, and wohnung; Dutch and Flemish wonen, to dwell; wonen-huis, a dwelling-house, a lodging.

There's auld Rab Morris that wons in the glen,
The king o' guid fellows, and wale o'
auld men.

—BURNS.

Wonner, wonder; applied in contempt to any odd, decrepit, or despicable creature.

Our whipper-in, wee, blastit wonner.

—BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Wont to be, a phrase applied to any ancient or obsolete custom or observance, a thing that used to be or was wont to be in olden time.

Mony wont to be's, nae doubt,
An' customs we ken nought about.

—JAMIESON: The Piper o' Peebles.

Woover-bab. It was formerly the custom among the young men and lads of the rural population in the Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland to wear bows of ribbons of flaunting colours in their garters on high days and holidays, when they expected to meet the lasses, and to dance or flirt with them.

The lasses' feet are cleanly neat,
Mair braw than when they're fine,
Their faces blythe fu' sweetly kythe,
Hearts leal an' warm an' kind;
The lads sae trig wi' woover-babs
Weel knotted on their garten,
Some unco blate, and some wi' gabs
Gar lasses' hearts gang startin'.

—BURNS: Hallowé'en.

"Bab," says Dr. Adolphus Wagner, the German editor of Burns, "seems akin to the English bob, something that hangs so as to play loose, and is a tassel or knot of ribbons, or the loose ends of such a knot." The English word bob, in this sense, is a corruption of the Gaelic bab, a fringe; and babag, a little fringe. Perhaps the English phrase, "tag, rag, and bobtail," is from the same source, and bobtail may signify the ragged fringe of a frayed outer garment, bobbing or dangling loose in the wind.

Wool or oo'. English; from the German and Flemish woll; in Scottish parlance, oo'. A' oo', all wool; a' ae oo', all one wool; ay, a' ae oo', yes, all one wool. There is a popular proverb which formerly ran—

Much cry and little oo', to which some humorist added—

As the Deil said when he shear'd the sow.

The addendum was at once adopted by the people, though some strict philologists remain of the opinion that the first line is complete in itself, and that "cry" does not signify the noise or uproar of the animal, but is a corruption either of the Gaelic graidh, or graiigh (gry), a flock, a herd, or cruidh, which has the same meaning, and signifies a large flock that yields but little wool. However this may be, the idea in the lengthened proverb has a grotesque humour about it, which insures its popularity.

Wooster, a woover, a lover, a sweetheart.

Wooster-tryste, a lonely meeting.

At kirk she was the auld folks' love,
At dance she was the laddies' e'en,
She was the blythest o' the blythe,
At wooster-trystes on Hallowe'en.

—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: CROMER'S
Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song.

Word. "To get the word of," i.e., to get the character, or the repute, of being so and so. "She gets the word o' being a licht-headed quean," i.e., the character of being a light-headed or frivolous woman.

Worl, wurl, wroul, wirr. All these words of a common origin express the idea of smallness, or dwarfishness, combined with perversity, disagreeableness, and ill-nature. Jamieson has wurlie, contemptibly small in size; a wurlie body, an ill-grown person; wurlin, a child or beast that is unthriven; wurr, to snarl like a dog; wirr, a peevish and crabbed dwarf; wurr, to be habitually complaining or snarling; and a wurlie rung, a knotted stick. He suggests that wirr and wurr are corruptions of were-wolf, the man-wolf of popular superstition—one afflicted with the disease called lycanthropy, in which the unhappy victim imagines himself to be a wolf, and imitates the howlings of that animal. The true etymology is uncertain. Perhaps all these words are derivable from the Teutonic quer, oblique, athwart, perverse—the origin of the English queer, quirk, and quirky. Jamieson has also wurp, a fretful, peevish person; and wurpit, afflicted with fretfulness. These latter seem akin to the Gaelic uipear, a clown, a churl, a bungler; and uipearach, ill-tempered, churlish.

Worry, to vex, to torment. In some parts of Scotland it signifies to strangle, to choke, or to be suffocated. Worry carl, a troublesome fellow, or ill-natured churl, who vexes both himself and others. Possibly from the Gaelic uair, stormy. (See WIRRY-COW, ante.)

Wow! an exclamation of surprise or wonder, without etymology, as exclamations usually are.

A fine fat fodge! wight,
Of stature short, but genius bright,
That's he! mark weel!
And wow! he has an unco slight
O' cauk and keel!

—BURNS: On Captain Grose.

And wow! but my heart dances boundin
and licht,
And my bosom beats blythesome and cheery.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: The Gloamin' Hour.

Wowf, partially deranged. The Scottish language is particularly rich in words expressive of the various shades of madness and insanity; such as wud, raging, or stark staring mad; daft, slightly deranged; gyte, cranky, subject to aberrations of intellect on particular points; doited, stupidly deranged—all which words are in addition to, and not in supercession of the English words, mad, idiotic, lunatic, crazy, &c.

It is very odd how Allan, who, between ourselves, is a little woruf, seems at times to have more sense than all of us put together.—SCOTT: Tales of My Landlord.

Wrack, to break in pieces, to wreck. In English the phrase "wrack and ruin" is more often used than "wreck and ruin;" from the same source as wreck, to act, do, or perform a deed of anger; to wreck spite or vengeance. It is possibly of the same origin as the Teutonic werken, the English work, employed in the sense of destroying rather than of creating or constructing.

Oh, roaring Clyde, ye roar o'er loud,
Your stream is wondrous strong;
Make me your wrack as I come back,
But spare me as I gang.

—JOHNSON'S Musical Museum: Willie and May Margaret.

Wraith, an apparition in his own likeness that becomes visible to a person about to die; a water-spirit.

He held him for some fleeting wraith,
And not a man of blood or breath.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

By this the storm grew loud apace,
The water-wraith was shrieking,
And in the scowl of heaven each face
Grew dark as they were speaking.

—THOMAS CAMPBELL.

The etymology of this word is uncertain. Some suppose it to be derived from wrath, or a wrathful spirit, summoning to doom. Jamieson is of opinion that it is from the same root as weird, fate or destiny, or the Anglo-Saxon weard or ward, a guardian, a keeper, and thence a fairy, a guardian angel. This derivation is scarcely tenable; that from breith, doom or judgment, aspirated as bhreith, is more probable, as the apparition of the wraith is always supposed to forebode the doom of the person who sees it.

Wrang, English wrong. The etymology of this word has been much disputed; but it seems to be from wring, to twist, and wrung, twisted or distorted from the right line. Wrang in Scottish parlance sometimes signifies deranged—out of the right line of reason. "He's a' wrang," i.e., he is demented. Wrang-wise is a wrong manner; the opposite of the English right-wise or righteous.

Writer, an attorney. Writer to the Signet, a solicitor licensed to conduct cases in the superior courts.

Wroul, an ill-formed or diminutive child; a name originally applied to one who was supposed to have been changed in its cradle by malicious fairies; a changeling. Jamieson refers to wer-wolf, a man supposed to be transformed into a wolf, called by the French a loup-garou, but this is evidently not the true derivation, which is more probably from the Dutch and Flemish ruil, to exchange.

Wud-scud, a wild scamper, a panic, called by the Americans a stampede; from wud, mad, and scud, to run precipitately and in confusion. The word is sometimes applied to an over-restive or over-frolicsome boy or girl, whom it is difficult to keep quiet.

Wudspur, a Scottish synonym for the English Hotspur, wild, reckless, one who rides in hot haste; from the Flemish woete, German wuth, old English wode and spur. It is difficult to decide which of the two words was the original epithet, and whether wood-spur in Scottish parlance was, or was not, anterior in usage to the Hotspur of the great poet.

There was a wild gallant among us a',
His name was Watty wi' the wudspur.
—Border Minstrelsy: Ballad of Jamie Telfer.

Wyg to wa'. "A thing," says Jamieson, "is said to gang frae wyg to wa', when it is moved backwards and forwards from the one wall of a house to the other." He suggests that wyg is but another name for wall, and that the phrase signifies really "from wall to wall." It is more probable that wyg is but a misspelling of the Gaelic uig, a corner.

Wyte, to blame, to reproach. The etymology is derived by Jamieson from the Anglo-Saxon witan, to know, and the Gothic wita, to impute. But the root of the word is the Flemish wyten, to blame, to reproach.

Ane does the skaith, and Another gets the wyte.
—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Many wyte their wives
For their ain thriftless lives.
Idem.

Alas! that every man has reason
To wyte his countrymen wi' treason.
—BURNS: Scotch Drink.

"Dame! deem warily! Ye watna wha wytes yoursel."—Old Proverb. (A warning to a censorious or tattling woman to beware of scandal, lest she herself should be scandalised.)

This was an English word in the time of Chaucer, but has long been obsolete except in Scotland.

Wyter, one who blames; an accuser.

Wyteworthy, blameable, blame-worthy.

Yald, sprightly, active, nimble, alert; yald-cuted (erroneously spelled yaul-cuted in Jamieson), nimble-footed; from yald, nimble, and cute, an ankle.

Being yald and stout, he wheel'd about,
And clove his head in twain.

—Hogg's Mountain Bard.

Yammer, yaumer, to lament, to complain; from the Flemish jammer, lamentation; jammern, to complain or lament; jammer-voll, lamentable.

Fareweel to the bodies that yammer and mourn.

—HERD'S Collection of Scottish Songs,
Bide ye Yet.

We winna, shauna, yaumerin' yirn
Though Fortune's freaks we dree.

—Whistle Binkie.

In Lancashire and the North of England yammer is used in another sense, that of yearning or desiring ardently.

I yammer'd to hear now how things turned out.

—TIM BOBBIN: Lancashire Dialect.

And the worm yammers for us in the ground.

—WAUGH'S Lancashire Songs.

Yankee, an inhabitant of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Maine, the six New England States of the American Union.

The etymology of the Scottish word has not been ascertained. Jank (pronounced yank) in Dutch and Flemish, signifies to cry out lustily, and junger, in German, is a young man, the English younker; but neither of these words can account for yankie, either in the Scottish or American sense. Danish and Swedish afford no clue. In provincial English, yanks are a species of leather gaiters worn by agricultural labourers, which, according to Halliwell, were once called "Bow Yankies." But this cannot be accepted as the origin, unless on the supposition that at the time of the emigration of the first colonists to America, the term signified not only leather gaiters, but those who wore them. This epithet is often erroneously applied in England to all Americans, though it is repudiated by the people of the Middle, Southern, and Western States. It is supposed to be a mispronunciation of English by the aboriginal Indian tribes, on the first colonisation of the Continent. Much controversy has arisen on the subject, which still remains undecided. No one, however, has hitherto remarked that the Scottish vernacular supplies the words yank, yanking, which signify a smart stroke ; yanker, an incessant speaker, and also a great falsehood ; yanking, active, pushing, speculative, enterprising. It is not insisted that this is the correct etymology, but if it be only a coincidence it merits consideration. No true New Englander would dissent from it for any other than philological reasons, in which it is certainly vulnerable, though on moral grounds it is all but unassailable.

Yap, yappish, sometimes written yaup, hungry, eager, brisk covetous.

Right yap she yoked to the ready feast,
And lay and ate a full half-hour at least.
—Ross's Helenore.

This word is probably derived from the Gaelic gab or gob, the mouth—whence by extension of meaning, an open mouth, craving to be filled. The English word gape, to yawn, or open the mouth wide, is from the same root. The eminent tragedian, Philip Kemble, always pronounced gape as gahp, not gaipe, and the late W. C. Macready followed his example. Jamieson travels very far north to find the derivation in the Icelandic gypa, vorax.

Although her wame was toom and she grown yap.
—Ross's Helenore.

Though bairns may pu' when yap or drouthy
A neep or bean to taste their mouthy.
But a' the neeps and a' the beans,
The hips, the haws, the slaes, the geens,

That e'er were pu'd by hungry weans
Could ne'er be missed,
By lairds like you, wi' ample means
In bank and kist.

—JAMES BALLANTINE: To the Laird of Blackford Hill.

Now hell's black table-cloth was spread,
The infernal grace was duly said ;
Yap stood the hungry fiends a' owre it,
Their grim jaws aching to devour it.

—Jacobite Songs and Ballads: Cumberland's Descent into Hell.

At that moment yap as ever.—Noctes Ambrosiana.

Yare, a word still used by sailors, but obsolete in literature, signifying ready, alert, heedful, or in a state of readiness ; used by Shakspeare and the writers of his time.

Our ship is tight and yare.

—Tempest, act v. scene 1.

If you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare.—Measure for Measure, act iv. scene 2.

Be yare in thy preparations, for thy assailant is quick, skilful, and deadly.—SHAKSPEARE: Twelfth Night.

Nares derives it from the Saxon gearwe, paratus ; but the real root seems to be the Celtic aire, heed, attention, alertness, readiness for action or duty ; as in the modern Gaelic phrase, "Thoir an aire," pay attention, be on the alert ; be yare ! allied to the French gare ! and the English beware !

Yark, to smite suddenly, forcibly, and aimlessly ; possibly a corruption of jerk.

He swat an' yarkit wi' his hammer,
The sparks flew frae the steel like glamour.

—BEATTIE: John o' Arnha.

Yatter (a corruption of the English chatter), to talk idly and incessantly; also, to complain querulously, and without reason. "She's a weary yatter," i.e., she's a tedious and wearisome gossip. Yatter also signifies a confused mass or heap, and is synonymous with hatter. (See ante, p. 841.)

Yaud or "far yaud!" an interjection or call by a shepherd to his dog, to direct his attention to sheep that have strayed, and that are far in the distance. Yaud, in this sense, as cited by Jamieson, seems to be a mispronunciation or misprint of yont! or yonder.

Yeld, or yell, barren, unfruitful. In Galloway, according to Jamieson, yald signifies niggardly. The etymology is uncertain, though supposed to be a corruption of geld, to castrate, to render unproductive.

A yeld soil, flinty or barren soil. A cow, although with calf, is said to gang yeld when the milk dries up. A yeld nurse is a dry nurse. Applied metaphorically to broth without flesh meat in it (soupe-maigre).—JAMIESON.

A yeld sow was never good to grices [i.e., a barren sow was never good to little pigs, or, a barren stepmother to the children of her husband by a previous wife].—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Thence country wives, in toil and pain,
May plunge and plunge the kirm in vain,
For oh, your yellow treasure's ta'en
By witching skill,
And dawit, twal-pint Hawkie's gaen
As yell's the bull.

—BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Yerk, a smart blow; yarker, a very smart and knock down blow; supposed to be a corruption of jerk, with which, however, it is not synonymous.

There's news, news, gallant news,
There's gallant news o' tartan trews,
An' red Clanranald's men, Joe;
There has been blinking on the bent,
An' flashing on the fell, Joe,
The redcoat sparks hae got the jerks,
But carle daurna tell, Joe.

—Jacobite Relics: Clanranald's Men.

Yestreen, last night, or yesterday evening. Yester, both in English and Scotch, was used as a prefix to signify time past; as yester-year, yester-month, yester-week; but in English its use has in modern times been restricted to day and night; and, by a strange surplusage of words, to yesterday night instead of yester night, and yesterday morning instead of yester morn. In Scotland, its use is more extended, and yestreen or yestreen, yesternoon, yesternight, are employed alike in poetic style and in everyday conversation. The word is from the German gestern (y pronounced as y) and the Flemish gisteren.

I saw the new moon late yestreen,
Wi' the auld moon in her arm,
And if we gang to sea, master,
I fear we'll come to harm.

—SIR PATRICK SPENS: Border Minstrelsy.

I gaed a waefu' gate yestreen,
A gate I fear I'll sairly rue,
I gat my death frae twa sweet e'en,
Twa sparklin' e'en o' bonnie blue.

—BURNS.

The derivation of the Teutonic gestern and gistern is probably from the Gaelic aosda, aged or old; so that yesterday, in contradiction to this day, or the new day, would signify the old day, the day that is past. Latin hesternus.

Yethar, a willow-wythe; also, a blow with a switch; probably a corruption of wyther, a stroke with a wythe.

Yevey, greedy, voracious, clamorous for food. Of doubtful etymology, though possibly from the Gaelic eibh (ēv), to clamour.

Yill, ale or beer.

A cogie o' yill
And a pickle oatmeal,
An' a dainty wee drappie o' whisky—
An' hey for the cogie,
An' hey for the yill,
Gin ye steer a' thegither, they'll do unco weel.

—A Cogie o' Yill, 1787.

Yird-fast or earth-fast, a stone well sunken in the earth, or a tree fast rooted in the ground.

The axe he bears it hacks and tears,
'Tis formed of an earth-fast flint;
No armour of knight, though ever so wight,
Can bear its deadly dint.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border;
LEYDEN—The Count of Keidar.

A yird-fast or insulated stone, enclosed in a bed of earth, is supposed to possess peculiar properties. Its blow is reckoned uncommonly severe.—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Yirr, the growl of a dog, English gurr. Gurl, growl; gern, to grin or snarl with ill-nature or anger.

Yoak, to look, to look at; possibly from the German aug, the Flemish oog, the Latin oculus, the eye; the English ogle, to look at.

Yoak your orlitch [horloge]. Look at your watch [or clock].—JAMIESON.

Yon. The use of yon and thon, in the sense of that, is much more common in Scotland than in England; as in the phrase, "Do ye ken yon man?" do you know that man. It is also used for yonder; as, yon hill, for yonder hill. It is sometimes pronounced and written thon; as in the following anecdote of a wilful child, narrated by Dean Ramsay:—

When he found every one getting soup and himself omitted, he demanded soup, and said, "If I dinna get it, I'll tell thon." Soup was given him. At last, when it came to wine, his mother stood firm and positively refused. He then became more vociferous than ever about telling thon; and as he was again refused, he again declared, "Now, I'll tell thon," and roared out, "Ma new breeks were made out o' the auld curtains!"

Yorlin, a small bird, more commonly known in England as the "yellow hammer." Scottish and English boys have a traditional prejudice against this bird, for some imaginary reason, or no reason at all. It sometimes reads in the old rhyme:—

Yellow, yellow yorling,
You are the devil's darling.

Yorne, prepared, made ready; part participle of yare ready, or to make ready.

To Norroway, to Norroway,
To Norroway o'er the faern,
The king's daughter o' Norroway,
'Tis we maun bring her hame;
Ye'll eat and drink, my merry men a',
An' see ye be weel yorne,
For blaw it weet, or blaw it sleet,
Our gude ship sails the morn.

Mr. Robert Chambers, in his Collection of Scots Ballads, 1829, prints thorne instead of yorne, without note or comment, or apparent knowledge of the unmeaning word.

Youk or yeuk, to itch; yowky, itchy. From the Teutonic jucken, pronounced yucken.

Your neck's youkin for a St. Johnstone ribbon. — ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

(A taunt, implying that a man's career and character is such as to merit hanging, and that he is nearly ready for it. St. Johnstone, now Perth, was the assize city. A ribbon signified the rope.)

How daddie Burke the plea was cookin',
If Warren Hastings' neck was yeukin.

—BURNS: To a Gentleman who Promised him a Newspaper.

Thy auld darned elbow yeuks with joy.

—BURNS: To Colonel de Peyster.

A parishioner in an Ayrshire village, meeting the minister, who had just returned after long absence on account of ill health, congratulated him on his convalescence, and added, anticipatory of the pleasure he would have in hearing him preach again—“Eh, sir! I'm unco yuckie to hear a blaud o' your gab.” —DEAN RAMSAY.

Youllie, a name formerly given to the police in Edinburgh by idle boys or bad characters. “A low term,” says Jamieson, “probably formed from the yowling or calling out.” Was it not rather formed from the Gaelic uallach, proud, haughty, arrogant, and given to the police derisively by the blackguards of the streets when, as they thought, they were interfered with unnecessarily, or ordered to move on? Or it may be from yoly, the French joli, pretty or handsome, used contemptuously, as in the phrase, “my fine fellow.”

Yowe, a ewe, a female sheep, a lamb; yowie, a eye lamb.

Ca' the yowes to the knowes [hills],
Ca' them where the heather grows,
Ca' them where the burnie rowes,
My bonnie dearie.

—BURNS.

An' neist my yowie, silly thing,
Gude keep her frae a tether string.

—BURNS: Poor Mailie.

Yowf, to strike hard and suddenly, as the ball is struck at the favourite Scottish game of golf. The common pronunciation of golf is gowf, and yowf is probably, as Jamieson alleges, a corruption of that word.

But had we met wi' Cumberland
On Athol's braes or yonder strand,
The blood o' a' his savage band
Had dyed the German Sea, man.

We wad hae yowf'd frae Charlie's seat,
And sent him hame to bide in state,
In's native Germanie, man.

Yowl, to howl, or whine as a dog; sometimes written gowl; from the Gaelic guil, or gul, to lament.

The gray dogs yowling left their food,
And crept to Henrie's feet.
—Border Minstrelsy: King Henry.

Yule. Yule was a Druidical festival in honour of the sun, celebrated at the winter solstice, in ages long anterior to the Christian era.

Yule, about the etymology of which there has been much controversy, was probably named in honour of the sun—the source of all heat and life upon this globe; from uile, all, the whole, whence, by extension of meaning, the whole year, ending at what we now call Christmas, and which in early times signified completion, the full turn of the wheel of the year. The Gaelic cuidhùl, a wheel, has also been suggested as the true root of the word; while iul, guidance, knowledge, has found favour with other etymologists, because on that day the assembled Druids, in their groves or in their stone circles, laid down rules for the guidance of the people during the coming year. Iul oidche, or the guide of night, was a name applied by Ossian to the Polar star. The French noel, and old English nowell, names for Christmas or Yule, are from the Gaelic naomh, holy, and là, a day. Jamieson, in citing the northern appellation for Odin as iul-fader, is in error in translating it as the father of Yule, or Christmas, instead of "All-Father," or father of all, which was an epithet applied to the sun as the Father of Light and Life.

LOST SCOTTISH AND ENGLISH PRETERITES.

A LIVING language is like a living man. It has its tender infancy ; its passionate youth ; its careful maturity ; its gradual, though it may be imperceptible, decay ; and, finally, its death. After death comes apotheosis, if it has been worthy of such honour—or burial in the books, which, like the remains or memorials of ancient heroes, become the sacred treasures of newer ages. All languages pass through these epochs in their career. Sanscrit, Greek, and Latin are familiar examples of the death and sanctity of great and mighty tongues, that were once living powers to sway the passions and guide the reason of men. In their ashes even yet live the wonted fires that scholars love to rekindle. The languages of modern Europe that have sprung directly from the Latin may all be said to have passed their infancy and youth, and to have reached maturity, if not old age. The Celtic or Keltic languages—all sprung from an ancient Oriental root, and which include Gaelic, often called Erse or Irish, Manx, Welsh, and Breton—appear to be in the last stage of vitality, destined to disappear, at no very remote period, into the books, which will preserve their memory. Were it not for Victor Hugo, and some recent borrowings from the English, and the coinage of Ergot or Slang, it might be said that French had ceased to expand, and had become stereotyped into a form no longer to be modified. Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian hold their own; and that is all that can be said of them. German, and the languages sprung from the same root and stem, contain within themselves such immense resources, and are so continually evolving out of their rich internal resources such new compounds, if not such new words, as to free them from that reproach of stagnation which may not unjustly be applied to the other great tongues which we have enumerated. But English—which, taken all in all, may be considered by far the richest, though not the most beautiful or the most sonorous, of all the languages spoken in our day—is yet in its vigorous prime, and, though it may be accused of vulgar corruptions and perversions, cannot be accused of exhibiting any symptoms of decay. It is doubtful whether it has yet reached the full maturity of its growth, or whether the mighty nations now existent in America, or the as mighty nations which are destined yet to arise in Australia and New Zealand, will not, as time rolls on, and new wants are created, new circumstances encountered, and new ideas evolved out of the progress of science and civilisation, add many thousands of new words to our already copious vocabulary. Other languages are dainty in the materials of their increment; but the English is, like man himself, omnivorous. Nothing comes much amiss to its hungry palate. All the languages of the earth administer to its wants. It borrows, it steals, it assimilates what words it pleases from all the points of the compass, and asks no questions of them, but that they shall express thoughts and describe circumstances more tersely and more accurately than any of the old words besides which they are invited to take their places. The beautiful dialect of its Scottish brother has given it strong and wholesome food, in the shape of many poetical words, which it is not likely to part with. But if the English is thus perpetually growing and gaining, it is at the same time perpetually losing. Were it not for the noble translation of the Bible, and for Chaucer, Gower, and the poets of the Elizabethan age, it would have lost still more than it has of its early treasures, and would have been Latinised to an extent that would have impaired and emasculated it, by depriving it of that sturdy vernacular which is the richest element in its blood, and best serves to build up its bone and muscle. If few languages now spoken in the world have gained so much as the English from the progress of civilisation, it must be admitted, at the same time, that few have lost so much, and lost it without necessity. It has been said that a good carpenter is known as much by the shape as by the quantity of his chips; and the chips that the English tongue has thrown off since the days of "Piers Ploughman" to our own, betoken, both by quality and by quantity, what a plethora of wealth it possesses, and what a very cunning carpenter Time has proved in working with such abundant materials.

It is one of the current assertions which, once started on high authority, are very rarely questioned, that the writings of Chaucer are a "well of pure English undefiled." Chaucer, though so ancient in our eyes, was a neologist in his own day, and strove rather to increase the wealth of the written English, of which he was so great a master, by the introduction of words from the Norman-French, little understood by the bulk of the people, though familiar enough to the aristocracy, for whom he mainly wrote, than to fix in his pages for ever the strong simple words of his native Saxon. The stream of English in his writings runs pure and cool; the stream of Norman-French runs pure and bright also; but the two currents that he introduced into his song never thoroughly intermingled in the language, and at least nine-tenths of the elegant Gallicisms which he employed found no favour with successive writers; and few of them have remained, except in the earlier poems of Milton. If we really wish to discover the true well of English undefiled, where the stream runs clear and unmixed, we must look to the Scottish author of "The King's Quair" and to the author of "Piers Ploughman," claimed by Buchanan, the tutor of King James the Sixth of Scotland and the first of England, to have been a Scotsman, rather than to Chaucer. We shall there find a large vocabulary of strong words, such as are plain to all men's comprehension at the present day, in the Bible as well as in the common speech of the peasantry; and, above all, in that ancient form of the English language which is known as the Scottish dialect, and which, in reality, is the oldest English now spoken.

Since the days of "Piers Ploughman," a work invaluable to every English and Scottish philologist, the spoken language of the peasantry has undergone but few changes as regards words, but very many changes as regards terminations and inflections. On the other hand, the language of literature and polite society has undergone changes so vast that uneducated people are scarcely able to understand the phraseology that occurs in the masterpieces of our great authors, or the Sunday sermons of their pastors, delivered, as the saying is, "above their heads," in words that are rarely or never employed in their everyday hearing. Among this class survive large numbers of verbs as well as of inflections that ought never to have been allowed to drop out of literature, and which it only needs the efforts of a few great writers and orators to restore to their original favour.

Among the losses which the modern English and Scottish languages have undergone are, first, the loss of the plurals in n and in en, and the substitution of the plural in s; secondly, the present participle in and, for which we have substituted the nasal and disagreeable ing; thirdly, the loss of the French negative ne, as in nill, for 'I will not;' would, for 'I would not;' n'am, for 'I am not;' and of which the sole trace now remaining is 'willy-nilly;' and, fourthly, the substituting of the preterite in d, as in loved and admired, for the older and much stronger preterite formed by a change in the vowel sound of the infinitive and the present, as in run, ran; bite, bit; speak, spoke; take, took; and many others that still survive. And not only has the language lost the strong preterite in a great variety of instances where it would have been infinitely better to have retained it, but it has lost many hundred preterites altogether, as well as many whole verbs, which the illiterate sometimes use, but which literature for a hundred and fifty years has either ignored or despised. Of all the nouns that formerly formed their plural in n, as the German or Saxon nouns still for the most part do, very few survive—some in the Bible, some in poetical composition, some in the common conversation of the peasantry, and some, but very few, in polite literature. Among them may be mentioned ‘oxen,’ for oxes; ‘kine,’ for cows; ‘shoon,’ for shoes; ‘hosen,’ for stockings; ‘een,’ for eyes; ‘housen,’ for houses; and the words, as common to the vernacular as to literature, ‘men,’ ‘women,’ ‘brethren,’ and ‘children.’ In America, the word ‘sistern’ as a companion to brethren, survives in the conventicle and the meeting-house. ‘Lamben’ and ‘thumben,’ for ‘lambs’ and ‘thumbs,’ were comparatively euphemistic words; but thumbs and lambs, and every noun which ends with a consonant in the singular, are syllables which set music, and sometimes pronunciation, at defiance. What renders the matter worse is, that the s in the French plural, from which this perversion of the English language was adopted, is not sounded, and that the plural is really marked by the change of the definite article, as le champ, les champs. Thus in borrowing an unpronounced consonant from the French, in order to pronounce it the English have adulterated their language with a multitude of sibilations alien to its spirit and original structure. The substitution of s for eth as the terminal of the present person singular of every verb in the language is an aggravation of the evil. If this change had been repudiated by our forefathers, a grace much needed would have been retained in the language.

Gradually, too, the English language has lost the large number of diminutives which it formerly possessed, and which are still common in the Scottish language and its dialects. The English diminutives in ordinary use in the nursery are many, but are chiefly employed in the pet names of children, as 'Willie,' for little William; 'Annie,' for little Ann; and so forth. The diminutives belonging to literature are few, and if we write 'darling,' for little dear; 'lordling,' for a small lord; 'mannikin,' for a very small man; and such words as 'gosling,' 'duckling,' 'kitten,' we have pretty nearly exhausted the list. But formerly almost every monosyllabic noun had its lawful diminutive, as it has to this day in the Scottish dialect, where such words as 'housie,' 'wifie,' 'birdie,' 'doggie,' 'bairnie,' 'mannie,' 'bookie,' 'lassie,' 'lammie,' and hundreds of others, are constantly employed. Every Scotsman understands the phrase "a bonnie wee lassiekie," in which there are no less than three diminutives piled one upon the other, to increase the tenderness of an expression which ceased to be English four hundred years ago.

Among other losses of the English from which the Scottish language has not suffered to the same extent are the plural in en of the present tenses of all the verbs. We loven and we smilen would serve many rhymical needs, and administer to many poetic elegancies that the modern forms in English do not supply.

"The persons plural," observes Ben Jonson, a Scotsman, in his "English Grammar"—a work by no means so well known as his poetry—"keep the termination of the first person singular. In former times, till about the reign of King Henry VIII., they were wont to be formed by adding en; thus, 'loven,' 'sayen,' 'complainen.' But now (whatsoever is the cause) it hath grown quite out of use. Albeit (to tell you my opinion) I am persuaded that the lack thereof, well considered, will be found a great blemish to our tongue."

But of all the losses which the language has sustained, not alone for poetry, but for oratory, that of many useful verbs, some of which are still existing in Scottish parlance, and of the ancient preterites and past participles of many old verbs of which the infinitives and present tenses still hold their places, is the most to be deplored. This loss began early; and that the process is still in operation in the present day, is manifest from the fact that many preterites written in the best books and spoken in the best society forty years ago, are dropping out of use before our eyes. We constantly find bid for bade—'he bids me now;' 'he bid me yesterday;' dare for durst—'I told him I dare not do it;' need for needed—'it was clear to me a year ago that he need not perform his promise;' eat for ate or ett—'he eat his dinner;' bet for betted—'he bet me a thousand to one.' The verbs to let, to cast, and to put, seem to have enjoyed no preterite during the last two hundred years in England, though in Scottish literature, both of the past and the present, their preterites are as common as their infinitives and present tenses. Must, in English, is equally devoid of the infinitive, the preterite, and the future; while can has a preterite, but neither infinitive nor future. For what reasons these and similar losses have occurred in English, it might be interesting to inquire, though it might possibly lead us into metaphysical mazes were we to ask why an Englishman who may say 'I can' and 'I could,' must not say 'I will can,' but must resort to the periphrase of 'I will be able,' to express power in futurity; or why the sense of present duty and obligation implied in the words 'I must,' cannot be expressed by the same verb if the duty be bygone or future, as 'I musted,' or 'I will must,' but have to be translated, as it were, into 'I was obliged,' or 'I will be obliged,' to do such and such a thing hereafter. These, however, are losses, whatever may be their occult causes, which can never again be supplied, and which at our time of day it is useless to lament.

The loss which most immediately affects the poetical power of modern English is that of the many preterites and past participles of ancient verbs that are still in use, and of many good verbs in all their tenses which without reason have been left for vernacular use to Scotland, and have not been admitted to the honours of literature, except in the poems of Robert Burns and the novels of Sir Walter Scott. These preterites ought not to be lost—they are not dead but sleeping—and only need the fostering care of two or three writers and speakers of genius and influence to be revived. They formed the bone and pith of the language of our forefathers, and the beauty and strength of the Bible in many of its noblest passages, and particularly commend themselves to us in Shakspeare, and other Scottish writers.

Aze, to inquire. This was the original and is the legitimate form of the verb now written and pronounced ask, and it is not only to be heard in colloquial use all over the British Isles, but to be found in our earliest writers, with the inflexions azed and azen.

Envy with heavy harte

Azed after Thirfte.

—Vision of Piers Ploughman.

If he aze a fish.

—WICKLIFFE'S Translation of the Bible.

Aze not why.

—CHAUCER: The Miller's Tale.

For the purposes of lyrical poetry and musical composition, the past participle of this verb, if reintroduced into literature, would be a vast improvement upon the harsh sound asked, which no vocalist can pronounce without a painful gasp.

Bake, boke, bulk, beuk, boken, to bake. Both the preterite and the past participle of this verb are lost to literature, though they survive in the rural dialects of Scotland and the north of England. The language possesses but few trochaic rhymes, and in this respect boken might do good service to many a poet at his wits' end for a rhyme to 'broken' and 'token.'

They never beuk a good cake, but May bake a bad one.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Beat, beaten. "The preterite of this verb," says Walker, in his "Pronouncing Dictionary," "is uniformly pronounced by the English like the present tense." "I think," says Dr. Johnson to Horne Tooke, in one of the imaginary conversations of Savage Landor, "that I have somewhere seen the preterite bate." "I am afraid," replied Tooke, "of reminding you where you probably met with the word. The Irishman in Fielding's 'Tom Jones' says 'he bate me.'" Johnson replied, "that he would not hesitate to employ the word in grave composition;" and Tooke acquiesced in the decision, justifying it by a statement of the fact, which, however, he did not prove, "that authors much richer both in thought and expression than any now living or recently deceased have done so." Children, who often make preterites of their own, in this respect acting unconsciously upon the analogies of the language, often say bett for did beat. And the children, it would appear, are correct, if the following from "Piers Ploughman" be considered good English:—

He laid on me with rage
And hitte me under the ear;
He buffeted me so about the mouthe
That out my teeth he bette.

In Ross's "Helenore"—a perfect storehouse of Scottish words current in Aberdeenshire, Kincardineshire, the Mearns, and the north-east of Scotland—we find,— Baith their hearts bett wi' the common stound,

And had nae pain, but pleasure in the wound.

This preterite might well be revived; it is sadly wanted, as witness the following passage from Mr. Disraeli's "Vivian Grey": "Never was she so animated; never had she boasted that her pulse beat more melodious music, or her lively blood danced a more healthful measure." If 'danced' (a preterite), why not bett, as "Piers Ploughman" has it? The following recent example of the present for the past participle beaten, is wholly unjustifiable:—

They were stoned, and the horse in their vehicle beat severely.—Temple Bar Magazine, March 1869.

Betide, betid, from tide, to happen. The preterite is lost. It occurs both in "Piers Ploughman" and in Chaucer:

Ther should never have tidde so fair a grace.

—Canterbury Tales.

Bid, and its derivative forbid. The ancient preterite and past participle of this verb were bade and bidden, forbade and forbidden. Both of these inflections are threatened with extinction;—for what offence it is impossible to surmise. Shakspeare says—

The very moment that he bade me do it.

That our modern writers do not follow the example of Shakspeare, and conform to the rules of good English, may appear from the following examples:—

The competition is so sharp and general that the leader of to-day can never be sure that he will not be outbid to-morrow.—Quarterly Review, April 1868.

Mr. Charles Dickens has finally bid farewell to Philadelphia.—Times, March 4, 1868.

Uncertain even at that epoch (1864) of Austria's fidelity, Prussia bid high for German leadership.—Times, April 9, 1868.

He called his servants and bid them procure firearms.—Times, letter from Dublin, March 2, 1868.

James the First, besides writing a book against tobacco, forbid its use by severe penalties.—Tobacco, by D. KING, M.D.

Blend, blent, to mingle. The preterite of this verb properly preserved by the poets, but seems to have entirely given way in prose and in ordinary speech to 'blended.' Any reason for the change it is impossible to discover; for if it be correct to say 'blended,' it would be equally correct to say 'spended,' 'lended,' or 'rended.' This form of the preterite in the verb 'to mend' has properly been superseded by 'mended,' in order to avoid the confusion that would be caused in the use of the verb 'to mean,' which has its proper preterite in 'meant.' Byron uses blent with fine effect in his noble lines on "The Battle of Waterloo:"—

Rider and horse, friend, foe, in one red burial blent.

Blin, to cease, to stop; blan, ceased, stopped.

And so he did or that they went atwin,
Till he had turned him he could not blin.

—CHAUCER: The Chanones' Yeman's Tale.

Her tears did never blin.

—NARES: Romeus and Julietta.

One while then the page he went,
Another while he ranne,
Till he'd o'ertaken King Estmere,
I wis he never blanne.

—PERCY'S Reliques: King Estmere.

Bren or brend, brent or brand, to burn. This verb is lost, though it might well have been retained in the language. "A brand plucked from the burning," and bran new, or brant new, new as a coin newly issued from the fires of the mint, are almost its sole remnants:—

Bring in better wood,
And blow it till it brend.

—Piers Ploughman.

Brest, brast, to burst.

Have thou my truth, till that mine herte brest.

—CHAUCER: The Franklein's Tale.

The mayor smote Cloudelee with his bill,
His buckler he brast in two.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border: Adam Bell, Clym of the Clough, and William of Cloudelee.

Busk, busked, to adorn, to dress, to make ready; from the Gaelic busg, to dress; busgadh, a head-dress, an ornament.

Busk ye, my merry men all,
And John shall go with me.

—PERCY'S Reliques: Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne.

The king's bowmen busked them blythe.

—Adam Bell, Clym of the Clough, and William of Cloudelee.

The noble baron whet his courage hot,
And busked him boldly to the dreadful fight.

—FAIRFAX: Translation of Tasso.

Busk ye, busk ye, my bonnie, bonnie bride.

HAMILTON: Brace o' Yarrow.

A bonnie bride is soon buskit.—ALLAN RAMSAT'S Scots Proverbs.

Cast, to throw. This verb in English has lost its preterite coost, and its past participle, casten. Both survive in Scotland and the North of England.

They coost kevels them amang
Wha should to the greenwood gang.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

Burns employs the preterite in "The Death and Dying Words of Poor Mailie":—

As Mailie and her lamb thegither,
Were ae day nibbling on the tether,
Upon her cloot she coost a hitch.

And again in his immortal song of "Duncan Gray":—

Maggie coost her head fu' high,
Looked asklent and unco skeigh,
Gart poor Duncan stand abeigh.

In the Scottish dialect 'to cast out' means 'to fall out,' 'to disagree;' and the phrase "they have casten out" is of constant occurrence.

Chirm, charm, churm, to sound like the murmur or sound of a multiplicity of birds. Mr. Halliwell, in his "Archaic Dictionary," defines the word to mean the melancholy undertone of a bird previous to a storm. Nares, in his Glossary, has charre, to make a confused noise, a word current in some parts of England. The word is common in Scotland, though almost obsolete in the South.

Small birds with chirming and with cheeping changed their song.

—GAWIN DOUGLAS's Translation of the Æneid.

At last the kindly sky began to clear,
The birds to chirm, and daylight to appear.

—ROSS's Helenore.

Milton makes Eve speak of the "charm of earliest birds," a phrase which has been misinterpreted to mean the charming (in the modern sense) song of the birds, while it really means chirm (in the old English and modern Scottish sense), the confused and intermingled song of all the morning birds.

Clead or clede, clad, to clothe. The preterite and past participle remain in poetical use as well as in dignified prose, while the infinitive and the present and future tenses have been superseded by the much harsher word 'clothe.'

Clem, clam, clammed, to perish of hunger, to starve. 'To starve' originally meant 'to die,' as we still say of a person that he is "starving with cold." The word has lately come to signify "to die for want of food," and has produced a very ugly and incorrect hybrid in the word 'starvation,' said to have been first used by Mr. Dundas, the first Lord Melville, who, as Horace Walpole informs us, received afterwards the nickname of "Starvation Dundas." The word at the time was supposed to be an Americanism. It has unfortunately fixed itself into our literature; but the original and much better word clem and its derivatives still hold their ground in Lancashire and the North of England. The word clem does not occur in Shakspeare, but both Ben Jonson and Massinger use it.

Hard is the choice when the valiant must eat their arms or clem.

—BEN JONSON: Every Man out of his Humour.

I canna eat stones and turfs. What! will he clem me and my followers? Ask him, will he clem me?—BEN JONSON: The Poetaster.

My entrails were clammed with a perpetual fast.—MASSINGER: The Roman Actor.

"Let us all clem," said a speaker at a public meeting at Manchester, during the American civil war, "rather than help the cause of slavery." "I would rather clem than go to the workhouse," is still a common and honourable expression in Lancashire.

Clepe, clept, yclept, to call, to name. The past participle of this verb remains for the use of bad writers, and sometimes of good writers who compose mock heroics.

The compaignie of comfort,

Men cleped it some tyme.

—Piers Ploughman.

Peradventure in thilk large book

Which that men clepe the heaven ywritten was

With stars.

—CHAUCER: The Man of Lawes' Tale.

They clepe us drunkards.

—SHAKSPEARE: Hamlet.

As hounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs,

Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves are cleped

All by the name of dogs.

—SHAKSPEARE: Macbeth.

Mr. Halliwell, in his "Archaic Dictionary," says that the word is still used by boys at play in the eastern counties, who clepe or call the sides at a game. Many newspaper writers at the present day, at a loss for a word for 'calling' or 'naming' an inanimate object, talk of the 'christening' of a church, a street, a battle, or any inanimate object. An example occurs in an editorial article of the Times, on the removing of the grating from the ladies' gallery in the House of Commons—" 'the grate question,' as Mr. Lowe christened it." In this and other instances the old word clepe, in default of 'call' or 'name,' would be an improvement, if it were possible to revive it.

Clip, clap, clippe, to embrace, to fondle. Before the English language borrowed from the French the word 'embrace,' from embrasser, to clasp in the arms, this verb was in constant use. It occurs in "Piers Ploughman," and in Chaucer, and had not fallen out of fashion or favour in the days of Shakespeare:—

Clippe we in covenant, and each of us clippe other.

—Piers Ploughman.

He kisseth her and clippeth her full oft.

—CHAUCER: The Merchant's Tale.

Worse than Tantalus is her annoy,

To clip Elysium and yet lack her joy.

—SHAKESPEARE: Venus and Adonis.

Then embraces his son, and then again he worries his daughter with clipping her.—SHAKESPEARE: Winter's Tale.

Oh let me clip ye in arms as round as when I woo'd!

—SHAKESPEARE: Coriolanus.

The lusty vine, not jealous of the ivy,

Because she clips the elm.

—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

The preterite, once common, survives to this day in the form of an infinitive and of a noun, but in both too offensive to modesty to be further mentioned.

Clout, clouted, to mend, to put a patch upon, from the Gaelic clud. The verb survives in Scotland, but has perished out of modern English literature, although Shakspeare used it:—

I thought he slept, and put
My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rudeness Answered my steps too loud.

—Cymbeline.

Many sentences of one meaning clouted up together.—ROGER ASCHAM.

Clout the auld, the new are dear, My joe Janet.

—BURNS.

Conne or can, to be able. Neither the infinitive nor the past participle of this verb seems to have been used since the days of Chaucer, who says, "I shall not conne answer," i.e., I shall not be able to answer; and in the "Romance of the Rose" has "Thou shalt never conne knowen."

Crine, crone, crunken, to shrivel from heat, frost, or sickness. This verb, with all its declensions, has perished, and only survives in its diminutive, to crinkle. In this last form it is rather of the middle ages than of our own. See the ballad of the "Boy and the Mantle" in Percy's "Reliques."

Cut. This verb never appears to have had a preterite, though a past participle ykitt or ykutt is cited in Herbert Coleridge's vocabulary of the "Oldest Words in the English Language." Whence or when the word was introduced into English no lexicographer has ever yet been able to determine. It is neither derived from the Teutonic, the French, the Greek, nor the Latin, and is therefore, by the exhaustive process, supposed by the most recent compilers of dictionaries to have been borrowed from the Gaelic cut, to make short, and such phrases as cuttie-pipe, cuttie-sark, and cuttie-stool, all implying shortness and curtailment. A near approach to it occurs in the French couteau, a knife or instrument to cut with; in the Italian coltello; and in the English and Scottish coulter, the ploughshare, or knife of the plough. It may be that the original word was kit, whence ykitt, cited by Mr. Coleridge, and that it formed its preterite by cat and cut. Some little support for this idea may be found in the word cat as applied in 'cat-o'-nine-tails,' a weapon that cuts pretty severely; and in kil-cat, as applied to portraits that are not exactly full-length, but cut to three-quarters length, as those painted for the celebrated "Kit-Kat Club."

Daff, daft, to make a fool of, to play the fool. Daffe in Chaucer signifies a fool; and in the Scottish and North English dialect a daft man signifies either a lunatic, or one who has been befooled. Daffing signifies foolish fun or merri-ment. In the scene between Leonato and Claudio in "Much Ado about Nothing," when Claudio declines to fight the old man, and says,—

Away! away! I will not have to do with you.

Leonato replies,—

Canst thou so daff me? Thou hast killed my child.

Both Mr. Charles Knight and Mr. Howard Staunton, following in the track of other Shakspearean editors, explain daff in this passage to mean 'doff,' or 'put off.' The true meaning is to 'befool,' as the word is used in Chaucer. When, elsewhere, Shakspeare says of Prince Henry,—

Thou madcap Prince of Wales, that daffed the world aside, the meaning of the word is the same. The 'madcap' did not 'doff' the world aside, for in this sense the expression would be pleonastic, but daffed or 'fooled' or jested it aside, as a madcap would.

Dare or durst, dared. The tendency of our modern and colloquial English, as well as of our current literature, is to ignore the two preterites and the past participle of this word, and to write and say dare where durst or dared would be more correct. There is also a tendency to omit the s in the third person singular of the present tense. The following are examples of each inaccuracy :—

Neither her maidens nor the priest dare speak to her for half an hour [durst speak to her, &c.].—Hereward the Wake, by the REV. CHARLES KINGSLEY.

The Government dare [durst] not consent to the meeting being held. . . . No one can feel anything but contempt for a Government which meanly attempts to gain a cheap reputation for firmness by fulminations which it dare [dares] not carry out ; and by prohibiting meetings which it dare [dares] not prevent.—London morning paper on the Hyde Park riots.

There is no reason why this verb should be deprived of its declensions, and no careful writer ought to fall into the errors just cited.

Deem, to judge. This word, which now signifies ‘to think’ rather than ‘to judge,’ and which has lost its old preterite doom, formerly implied the delivery of a doom, sentence, or judgment. Chaucer calls a judge a doomsman ; and in the Isle of Man the judge is still called the dempster or deemster. The day of Doom is the day of Judgment. Chaucer does not use the old preterite doom, which seems to have perished before his time ; but in the “Franklein’s Prologue” uses the substantive doom in the sense of an opinion or a private judgment :—

As to my doom, there is more that is here
Of eloquence that shall be thy peer,
If that thou live.

Out of the lost preterite the English writers of three centuries ago formed a new verb, to doom, with a regular preterite, doomed—a word which does not merely signify to pass judgment upon, but to pass a severe sentence.

Delve, dolve, dolven, to dig, to make a trench or ditch, to bury in the earth. This verb is still retained in poetical composition, and in the everyday speech of the people in Scotland and some of the northern counties; but the old preterite and past participle are lost. They have found a substitute in the regular declension delved. The old preterite seems to have become obsolete at an early period, as appears from the distich of John Ball the priest, the friend and coadjutor of Wat Tyler in the rebellion of 1381:—

When Adam delved and Eve span,
Who was then the gentleman?

Chaucer used the participle, "I would be dolven [buried] deep;" and in the "Romance of Merlin," a man who was to be buried alive is described as to "be dolven quick." "Piers Ploughman" has, "They dolven with spades and shovels to drive away hunger." Keats, in more modern times, employs delved:—

Oh for a draught of vintage that hath been Cooled a long age in the deep delved earth!

If he had said deep dolven instead of deep delved, he would have had high authority, and would have greatly improved the stately march and music of his verse.

Dight, dighted, to prepare, to put in order, to deck, to attire, to wipe away. This useful word of many meanings is all but obsolete in English literature, but survives in Scottish. The preterite has long been lost. An offshoot of this word in the form of misdight (misprepared) occurs in Jack Miller's song, quoted by Stowe in his account of Wat Tyler's rebellion:—

If might Go before right,
And will
Before skill,
Then is our mill misdight.

Spencer and Milton both attempted to revive dight, but with only partial success:—

Soon after them, all dancing in a row,
The comely virgins came with garlands dight.

—The Faerie Queene.

The clouds in thousand liveries dight.

—L'Allegro.

Storied windows richly dight.

—Il Penseroso.

In Scottish parlance dight does constant service. The lassie dights her mou' before accepting a kiss, and dights her een after she has been weeping. She dights herself in her best attire before going to kirk; and the wife dights the dinner for her husband.

Dight your cheeks and banish care.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Let me rax up to dight that tear,
And go with me and be my dear.

—BURNS: The Jolly Beggars.

Ding, dang, dong or dung, to strike hard, to beat down. The infinitive and present tense of this verb are still colloquially current, but the preterite and past participle are obsolete, or only survive in the nursery phrase, "Ding, dong, bell." In Scotland the verb and all its inflections survive. Burns, in his often-quoted line, says, "Facts are chiels that winna ding." Sir Alexander Boswell has a song entitled "Jenny dang the Weaver," which expression was translated by an English critic into the very prosaic form of "Jenny vanquished the cotton manufacturer." The past-participle occurs in the familiar proverbs quoted by Allan Ramsay, "It's a sair dung bairn that munna greet," and "He's sairest paid that's dung wi' his ain wand." The modern English preterite dinged is still occasionally heard in conversation, though lost to literature, as in such phrases: "Horace? Yes; he was dinged into me at school;" and colloquially, "Why do you keep dinging that old story into my ears?"

The word constantly occurs in serious poetry up to the time of Shakspeare and Ben Jonson, and survives, and is likely long to survive, in the nursery rhyme—

Ding, dong, bell,
Pussy's in the well.

The hellish prince, grim Pluto, with his mace, ding down my soul to hell!—The Battle of Alcazar.

Do-well shall dyngen him down,
And destroyen his mighte.

—Piers Ploughman.

She dings you in her hamely gown o' gray,
As far's a summer dings a winter day.

—Ross's Helenore.

My chains then, and pains then,
Infernal be their hire,
Who dang us and flang us,
Into this ugsome mire.

—ALLAN RAMSAY: The Vision—The Evergreen.

The beautiful poem of "The Vision," written in older Scotch than that of the time of Allan Ramsay, is signed A. R. Scotus, meaning, "Allan Ramsay, a Scot." It expresses in covert allusion, the indignation of the Scots of Allan Ramsay's day, at the Union of Scotland with England, and the means by which it was accomplished. Allan Ramsay's Jacobite friends were all well aware that the poem was from his pen, but the government of the day, though suspecting the fact, and willing to prosecute him, wisely refrained from doing so.

Dow, to be able, to thrive; dought, was able. This verb is utterly lost from English literature, but, like many others of its sturdy class, exists in the speech of the English peasantry, and in the speech as well as the literature of Scotland. By a strange neglect, or a stranger ignorance, the makers of dictionaries—from Blount and Philips up to Johnson, Richardson, Worcester, Webster, and Stormonth—have either omitted all mention of it, or erroneously considered it to be synonymous with, or an orthographical error for, the similar word 'do,' with which it has no connection. "I do as well as I dow?"—i.e., "I do as well as I can"—is a common phrase in the North: and the super-eminently English but pleonastic inquiry, "How do you do?"—which means "How do you dow?"—i.e., thrive, prosper, or get on—has come to be accepted as accurate English, though wholly a mistake of the learned. Even Nares, in his Glossary, has no suspicion of this word, though Halliwell, more acute, gives one of its meanings, 'to thrive,' 'to mend in health;' and Mr. Thomas Wright, in his "Provincial Dictionary," follows in the same track as regards its use in English literature, though he does not seem to be aware of its commonness in the literature of Scotland. William Hamilton, the Scottish poet, writes to his friend Allan Ramsay,—

Lang may'st thou live and thrive and dow!

And Burns says to Gavin Hamilton,—

When I downa yoke a naig,
The Lord be thankit, I can beg!

In his "Epistle to King George III.," in his eulogy of facts, Burns speaks of them as "chiels that winna ding," and adds, "they downa be disputed." Ross, in his "Helenore," has "When he dow do nae mair,"—a phrase that shows the essential difference between the two words.

From this obsolete verb springs the adjective doughty, strong, able—a derivation which up to the present time seems to have escaped the notice of all the English lexicographers.

Dread, drad, dradden, to fear greatly. The modern preterite and past participle dreaded have entirely superseded the ancient forms.

But what I drad, did me, poor wretch, betide.

—ROBERT GREENE, 1593.

Dwine, dwined, to pine away, to fall off. This verb has been superseded by its diminutive, to dwindle, which has the same meaning.

Thus dwineth he till he be dead.

—GOWER.

It *dwind*ed for eld.

—CHAUCER.

Bacchus hates repining ;

Venus loves no *dwin*ing.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

Fang, fong, fung, to seize, to lay hold of. Most people remember the old law phrase, "infang thief and outfang thief," the one signifying a thief taken within the jurisdiction of a feudal lord, and the other a thief taken without his jurisdiction. This is the only remnant of this verb that has come down to our time except the substantive fang, the large tooth of a beast of prey or of a serpent ; the diminutive fangle, to take hold of a new fancy or fashion ; and the common phrase new-fangled. In Scotland it is sometimes said when the well does not readily yield the water after repeated strokes of the pump, that the pump has lost its fang o' the water.

I nold fang a farthing (I would not take a farthing).

—Vision of Piers Ploughman.

He fong his foeman by the flank,

And flang him on the floor.

—BUCHAN'S Northern Ballads.

Fare, foor, fore, fure, fared, to travel. This verb is not wholly obsolete, though its preterite is lost. It has come to signify to eat and drink as well as to travel, and also that which is eaten or drunk. It is doubtful whether our beautiful word 'farewell' means "may you travel well through life," or "may you be well treated by the world." A way-faring man is still a common expression. 'Auld-farrand,' travelling on the old ways, old-fashioned, is intelligible to the people on the north of the Tweed. The preterite occurs several times in the "Vision of Piers Ploughman."

Alexander fell into a fever therewith, so that he fure wondrous ille.
—MS. LINCOLN, quoted in HALLIWELL'S Archaic Dictionary.

Her errand led her through the glen to fare.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

As o'er the moor they lightly foor,
A burn was clear, a glen was green—
Up the banks they eased their shanks.

—BURNS.

Forewent, preterite of to forego, to renounce.

Writers and speakers still say, "I forego the pleasure," but use a roundabout form of expression rather than say, "I forewent the pleasure." And why? Forewent is as legitimate a word as forego, and should not be allowed to become obsolete.—Lost Beauties of the English Language.

Forswink, forswunk, to be worn out with overmuch toil.

She is my goddess plain,
And I her shepherd swain,
Albeit forswunk and forswat I am.

—SPECKER: Shepherd's Calendar.

Fret, fret, fretten, to devour or eat up; from the French and Dutch freten, the German fressen, to eat.

Like as it were a moth fretting a garment.—PSALM xxxix., Common Prayer.

Adam freet of that fruit,
And forsook the love of our Lord.

—PIERS Ploughman.

He (the dragon) has fretten of folk more than five hundred.—Morte d'Arthur.

Frush, frusht, frushed, to bruise, disturb, rumple, disarrange. From the Gaelic frois, a driving gust of rain, and froiseach, to scatter, to shake off, and French froisser, to rub against. This good Shakspearean word is fairly admissible into modern dictionaries, in few of which, however, does it find a place.

Stand! stand, thou Greek! thou art a goodly mark!
No! wilt thou not? I like thy armour well,
I'll frush it and unlock the rivets all!

—SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida.

Hector assailed Achilles and gave him so many strokes that he all to frusht and brake his helm.—CAXTON's Destruction of Troy.

High cedars are frushed with tempests.—HINDE, 1606.

Southey uses the substantive :—

Horrible uproar and frush of rocks that meet in battle.

The word well deserves favour and restoration.

Gar, gart, gard, to compel, to force, to make, to cause a thing to be done. This verb in all its declensions has become obsolete in English literature, where its place has been but feebly supplied by 'make' and 'made.' "I'll make him do it" is neither so strong nor so elegant as the ancient English and modern Scotch, "I'll gar him do it."

Gar us have meat and drink, and make us chere.

—CHAUCER: The Reeve's Tale.

Gar saddle me my bonnie black,

Gar saddle soon, and make her ready.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

And like the mavis on the bush,

He gart the vallies ring.

—PERCY's Reliques.

Auld Girzie Graham, having twice refused a glass of toddy, when pressed a third time, replied, "Weel! weel! since ye winna hear o' a refusal, just mak it hot, an' strong, an' sweet, an' gar me tak it!"—Laird of Logan.

Get, got, gotten, to attain, to procure, to come into possession of. The past participle of this verb has lately become obsolete, except in the talk of the uneducated and in Scottish literature. It was common in the last century.

We knew we were gotten far enough out of their reach.—DEFOE: Robinson Crusoe.

Ken ye what Meg o' the mill has gotten ?
 She's gotten a lout wi' a lump o' siller,
 And broken the heart o' the barley miller.

—ROBERT BURNS.

There is also a marked tendency to the disuse of this inflection in the verb 'to forget,' and people too commonly say and write "I have forgot," instead of forgotten.

Glide, glode, glidden, to move away easily and smoothly. The ancient preterite and past participle have become obsolete, and have been superseded by glided, much to the loss of versifiers in search of good rhymes.

His good stede he all bestrode,
 And forth upon his way he glode.

—CHAUCER.

He glode forth as an adder doth.

—Idem.

Through Guy's shield it glode.

—Guy of Warwick.

The reason of the substitution of the regular for the irregular preterite may be found in the desire to prevent confusion with the regular preterite of the verb 'to glow.'

Glint, glent, glinted, to shine, to flash, to appear suddenly. In Sternberg's "Northamptonshire Glossary" the infinitive of this verb as used amongst the peasantry of that part of England is cited as gline. Glint would be the legitimate preterite if this were correct. In Scottish poetry glint is the infinitive, and glinted the preterite and past participle. In Old English poetry glent is the preterite.

The sunbeams are glinting far over the sea.

—Newcastle Garland.

Could blew the bitter biting north
Upon thy early humble birth,
Yet cheerfully thou glinted forth
Amid the storm.

—BURNS: To a Mountain Daisy.

There came a hand withouten rest
Out of the water,
And brandished it.
Anon as a gleam away it glent.

—Morte d'Arthur.

Gnaw, gnaw, gnawed, to bite at a hard substance. The old preterite is lost, doubtless on account of its identity in pronunciation with the more familiar word 'knew,' the preterite of 'know,' a word of different meaning.

Till with the grips he was baith black and blue,
At last in twa the dowie ropes he gnaw.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

No sustenance got,
But only at the cauld hill's berries gnaw.

—Idem.

Go, gaed, gone, to depart. The ancient and legitimate preterite of this verb has been superseded by the preterite ('went') of the verb to 'wend,' to turn away. It maintains its ground, however, in Scotland and the northern English counties. Chaucer has 'gadling,' for a vagabond, a wanderer who goes much about; and the language still retains the word to 'gad,' to wander or stray about, making short visits.

I gaed a waefu' gate yestreen.

—BURNS.

Grab, grub, grabbed, to dig up, to seize. This verb, in all its inflections, has been wholly relegated to the speech of the vulgar, but, like many other vulgar words, has a highly respectable origin. Grab, in its first sense, means to dig a grave or hole; and grub means that which is dug up, such as roots for human subsistence, whence its modern and slang signification, 'food.'

Graith, graithed, to prepare, make ready. A critic in the Literary Gazette of March 30, 1860, called a poet to account for using such an unpermissible word as grraith, of which he declared his utter ignorance. He might, however, have found it in Chaucer, in Worcester's Dictionary, and in Robert Burns:—

Her son Galathin
She grraithed in attire fine.

—Arthour and Merlin.

Unto the Jewes such a hate had he,
That he bade grraith his chair full hastilie.

—CHAUCER: The Reeve's Tale.

Go warn me Perthshire and Angus baith,
And grraith my horse.

—Song of the Outlaw Murray.

Greet, grat, grutten, to weep. This verb, with all its declensions, has lost its place in English literature, though the word greet remains with a different meaning, 'to salute.' Like other strong indigenous words which modern English has unnecessarily discarded, it is retained in Scotland. It seems to have been lost even in Chaucer's time, who uses greet entirely in the modern sense of 'to salute.' "Piers Ploughman" has it in the sense of 'to lament' or 'weep.'

And then 'gan Gloton to greet,
And great dool to make.

"It's a sad time," says an old Scottish proverb, "when hens crow and bearded men greet." Another proverb says, "Better bairns should greet than bearded men."

Then ilk ain to the other made his wain,
And sighed and grat, and grat and sighed again.

—Ross's Helenore.

Duncan sighed baith out and in,
Grat his een baith bleer't and blin'.

—BURNS: Duncan Gray.

The Edinbro' wells are grutten dry.

—BURNS: Elegy on the Year 1788.

Heat, to make or grow hot; het, made hot.

Let him cool in the skin he het in.—ALLAN RAMSAY: Scots Proverbs.

Help, holp, holpen, to aid. The preterite and past participle are fast becoming obsolete. They are still retained in the Flemish language.

For thou hast holpen me now.

—HALLIWELL: MS. Cantab.

And blind men holpen.

—Piers Ploughman.

Building upon the foundation that went before us, and being holpen by their labours.—The translators of the Bible to the reader: temp. JAMES I.

Hend, hent, to take, to hold, to seize, to apprehend.

Jog on, jog on, the footpath way,
 And merrily hent the style-a :
 A merry heart goes all the day,
 Your sad tires in a mile-a.

It is probable that in this well-known passage from the song of Autolycus in the "Winter's Tale," the preterite hent is a misprint for the infinitive hend, though it must be admitted that Chaucer uses hent both in the present and the past tenses. This is a very unusual defect in an English verb of that early period.

All be it that it was not our intente,
 He should be sauf, but that we sholde him hent.

—CHAUCER: The Friar's Tale.

Shakspeare uses hent as a substantive, to signify a purpose, an intention to hold by, in Hamlet's exclamation, when he determines not to kill the king at his prayers :—

No !

Up, sword ! and know thou a more horrid hent !
When he is drunk, asleep, or in his rage.

Hit, het, hitten, to strike, to touch violently with a blow. Both preterite and past participle are obsolete. Hitten survives in the colloquial language of the peasantry.

Your honour's hitten the nail upon the head.

—ROSS'S Hednere.

The Americans, in default of the old preterite het, occasionally say hot—as, “He hot me a heavy blow ; he hot out right and left.”

Hold, held, holden, to have, grasp, or retain in possession. The past participle is obsolete, but might be advantageously revived for the sake of the rhyme which it affords to ‘golden,’ ‘embolden,’ &c.

Keek, keeked, to peep, to look in slily.

The robin came to the wren's nest,
And keeked in and keeked in.

—NURSERY Rhymes of England.

This Nicholas sat even gape upright,
As he had keeked on the new moone.

—CHAUCER: The Miller's Tale.

Stars, dinna keek in
And see me wi' Mary.

—BURNS.

Kythe, kouth or couth, to show, appear, know, make known. This word has become wholly obsolete in England, but survives in Scotland. The sole remnant of it in English is uncouth, originally meaning something unknown, unheard of, strange, and now meaning rough or ungainly. Milton has—

Bound on a voyage uncouth, meaning unknown. The Scotch have the word couthie, familiar, or well known,

And to the people's eyes all and some
Was couth that a new markissee
He with him brought in such pompe and richenes
That never was there seen with manne's eye.

—CHAUCER: The Clerk's Tale.

Take your sport, and kythe your knights.

—Sir Ferumbas.

Kythe in your ain colours, that folk may ken you.—ALLAN RAMSAY'S
Scots Proverbs.

Their faces blythe, they sweetly kythe.

—BURNS.

Laugh, lough, leuch. The ancient preterite and past participle of this verb have been superseded by the modern preterite in ed.

Then lough there a lord,
And "By this light" saide,
"I hold it right and reson."

—Piers Ploughman.

He cleped it Valerie and Theophrast,
And lough always full fast.

—CHAUCER: The Wife of Bath's Prologue.

When she had read Wise William's letter,
She smiled and she leuch.

—MOTHERWELL'S Collection.

"I think not so," she halfins said, and leuch.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

How graceless Ham leuch at his dad,
Which made Canaan a nigger.

—BURNS: The Ordination.

An' ilka ane leuch him to scorn.

—PERCY'S Reliques: The Auld Guidman.

Leap, lope, lopen, to leap. At what time this verb followed the analogy of weep, creep, and sleep, and formed its preterite in leap or lept, does not very clearly appear.

And they laughing lope to her.

—PIERS Ploughman.

Have lopen the better.

—Idem.

Up he lope and the window broke,
And he had thirty foot to fall.

—PERCY'S Reliques: The Murder of the King of Scots.

Tom Rindle lope fra the chimley nook.

—WAUGH'S Lancashire Songs.

Let, loot, letten, looten, to let, to permit. This verb has lost all its inflections in literary and colloquial English, but preserves them in the Scottish dialect.

But letten him lede forth whom hym liked.

—PIERS Ploughman.

And aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock o' Hazeldean.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Ye've loot the ponie o'er the dyke.

—BURNS.

But dool had not yet letten her feel her want.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

He boore upon him and ne'er loot her ken.

—ROSS'S Helenore.

Ligge, ligged, to lie down. This ancient word is still in common use in Cumberland and Northumberland, and also in the Border counties of Scotland.

So that the Holy Ghost
Gloweth but as a glade,
Till that lele love
Ligge on him.

—Piers Ploughman.

What hawkes sitten on the perche above!
What houndes liggen on the floor adown!

—CHAUCER: The Knight's Tale.

I have ligged for a fortnight in London, weak almost to death, and neglected by every one.—G. P. R. JAMES: Gowerie, or the King's Plot.

List or lest, lust, to please. This word has gradually been dropping out of use, but having been preserved in the Bible, is still occasionally heard. The preterite is lost, though the word itself survives as a substantive, and as the infinitive of another verb, to lust, signifying to desire pleasure vehemently.

The wind bloweth where it listeth.

The colloquial expression, "to list for a soldier," seems to come from this root, and means, to please to become, or voluntarily to become, a soldier. Chaucer uses lust in the sense of joy:—

Farewell, my life, my lust, and my gladnesse.

—The Knight's Tale.

Lout, louted, to make an obeisance or a curtsey.

And then louted adown.

—Piers Ploughman.

"Sir," quoth the dwarf, and louted low.

—PERCY'S Reliques: Sir Cauline.

They louted to that ladye.

—PERCY'S Reliques: On Alliterative Metre.

To which image both young and old
Commanded he to lout.

—CHAUCER: The Monke's Tale.

And I am louted by a traitor villain.

—SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI., Part i.

Melt, molt, molten, to liquefy by means of heat. The preterite is lost, but the past participle is still preserved in poetry and the Bible.

Mint, minted, to essay, to try, to aim, to attempt, to prove the genuineness of metals before coinage.

Minting's not making (attempting's not doing).

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

A minted [attempted] excuse.

—The Two Lancashire Lovers: 1660.

Nake, naked, to denude of covering. The preterite survives as an adjective; the infinitive is lost.

Come, be ready! nake your swords.
Think of your wrongs!

—NARES: Revenge's Tragedy.

Pight, a word that occurs in Chaucer, is defined by Tyrwhitt as meaning, 'pitched,' rather than the preterite of 'put':—

He pight him on the pomel of his head,
That in the place he lay as he were dead.

—CHAUCER: The Knight's Tale.

Stowe, however, at a later period, uses pight for 'did put':—

He was brought to the Standard in Cheape, where they strake off his head and pight it on a pole, and bare it before them.—STOWE'S Annals: Henry VI.

Prank, pranked or pranked, to adorn, to embellish, to dress fashionably.

Some prank their ruffs, and others trimly dight
Their gay attire.

—SPENSER: The Faerie Queene.

False tales pranked in reason's garb.

—MILTON: Comus.

Most goddess-like pranked up.

—SHAKESPEARE: Winter's Tale.

Put, pat or pight, putten or pitten, to place. The modern verb has lost the preterite and past participle.

I there wi' something did forgether,
That pat me in an eerie swither.

—BURNS: Death and Doctor Hornbook.

Ye see how Rob and Jenny's gone sin' they Ha'e pitten o'er their heads the merry day.

—ROSS's Helenore.

He's putten it to a good purpose, has Brighthouse.—The Master of Marston: London, 1664.

Quake, quoke, to tremble with fear.

An ugly pit, as deep as any hell,
That to behold therein I quoke for fear.

—The King's Quair.

The whole land of Italy trembled and quoke.

—DOUGLAS: Translation of the Æneid.

Quethe or queath, quoth, to say. The infinitive of this verb is lost, but the preterite quoth remains in colloquial use, and in writings that do not aspire to eloquence or dignity, as 'quoth he,' 'quoth I.' Bequeath, to say in your will what part of your property your heirs or legatees shall possess, is a remnant of this ancient verb.

Rax, raught, to reach, to stretch.

He raught to the steere (he reached to the helm).

—Piers Ploughman.

He start up and would have him raught.

—MERLIN: Early English Metrical Romances.

—SHAKESPEARE: Comedy of Errors.

Their three-mile prayers and half-mile graces,
Their razing conscience.

—BURNS: Epistle to M^c Math.

—CHAUCER: Legende of Good Women.

—NARES.

Reave, reft, take off, take away, whence the old English and Scottish word reaver or reiver, a thief. This word survives in bereave and bereft, but is fast becoming obsolete.

If he reaveth me by night,

He robbeth me by maistrye.

—Piers Ploughman.

Therefore, though no part of his work to reave him,

We now for matters more allied must leave him.

—HEYWOOD'S Troia Britannia, 1609.

To go robbe that ragman,

And reave the fruit from him.

—Piers Ploughman.

Means to live by reaf of other men's goods.—HOLINSHED'S Chronicles.

use before its modern synonym was borrowed with other culinary phrases from the Norman French:—

And he said unto his servant, Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.—2 KINGS iv. 38.

Y-sodden or y-baken

—Piers Ploughman.

Shape, shope, shopen, to make, to create, to put into form. This verb has wholly lost its original meaning in the infinitive and present, in which form it subsists as a regular verb, with its preterite in d. Its preterite and past participle have long been obsolete, and do not seem to have been used in English literature after the time of Chaucer.

God shope the world.—WICKLIFFE'S Bible.

The king and the commune Shopen laws.

—Piers Ploughman.

To which this sempnour shope him for to wende.

—CHAUCER: The Frere's Tale.

Shear, sheer, shore or shure, shorn, to cut closely off. The ancient preterite is obsolete, and has been superseded in the regular form in ed. The sea-shore—i.e., the strip of land sheared, shore, or shorn by the action of the waves—is the sole relic of this word in modern parlance.

Robin shure in hairst [harvest],
I shure wi' him.

—BURNS.

The steward on his knees sat down
With the emperor for to rowne.

—Romance of Cœur de Lion.

But if it like you that I might rowne in your ear.

—SKELTON.

Sag, sog, to bend or give way under pressure, to fail.

The mind I sway by, and the heart, I fear,
Shall never sag with doubt or shake with fear.

—SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth.

That it may not sag from the intention of the founders.

—FULLER'S Worthies.

From the lost preterite sog comes the adjective soggy, often used by the Americans to signify wet boggy soil that yields to the foot.

Scathe or skaith, to do an injury or damage. Shakspeare and Milton use the verb :—

This trick may chance to scathe you.

—Romeo and Juliet.

Scathed the forest oaks.

—MILTON.

The substantive scathe or skaith, signifying hurt, damage, and injury, survives in Scottish speech and literature, and is not wholly obsolete in English poetry, though rarely used by modern writers.

Oh ! if on my bosom lying,
I could work him deadly scathe,
In one burst of burning passion,
I would kiss him unto death !

—Love in Hate,

Seethe, sod, sodden, to boil. The translators of the Bible have preserved this old English word, which was in common use before its modern synonym was borrowed with other culinary phrases from the Norman French :—

And he said unto his servant, Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.—2 KINGS iv. 38.

Go suck the subtle blood o' th' grape
Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth.

—BURNS.

Boston was the Delilah that allured him [Daniel Webster]. Oft he broke withes of gold, till at last she shore off his locks, and his strength went from him.—THEODORE PARKER: Discourse on the Death of Daniel Webster.

Shend, shent, shent, to rebuke, to blame, to shame, or bring to shame.

What say you, sir?

I am shent for speaking to you.

—SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night.

He that shames let him be shent.

—ALLAN RAMSAY.

All woe-begone was John o' the Scales,

Soe shent he could say never a word.

—PERCY'S Reliques: The Heir of Lynne.

Spenser in the "Faerie Queene," and Thomson in the "Castle of Indolence," use this word. According to Dr. Johnson, the last author of note who employed it was Dryden. It survives in Scotland.

Shread, shred, to cut off the ends, to lop. The old preterite has long been obsolete, but survives as a noun; shred, a thing lopped off or cut off, a remnant.

The superfluous and waste sprigs of vines being shreaded off.—WITHALL'S Dictionary: 1608.

A shredded of trees.—NARES.

Shrew, shrow, shrown. This obsolete word, of which the only current representative is shrewd, a perversion of the original meaning, signifies 'to curse,' and finds a singular synonym in America. In England a scolding wife is a shrew; in America the same disagreeable person is a 'cuss.' Shakespeare applies the word shrew to both sexes, just as the Americans do the word 'cuss.' "Beshrew me!" the old ejaculation, meant "curse me!" At the present day inferior writers and careless speakers will say, "I have a shrewd suspicion," meaning "a sharp, cunning suspicion." The time at which the word assumed this new meaning in speech or literature is uncertain.

Shrive, shrove, shriven, to confess to the priest; shrift, a confession. This verb, in all its inflections, went out when the Reformation came in, and only survives in poetry and romance, and in the word "Shrove Tuesday."

Slake, sloke, sloken, to assuage thirst, to quench a fire. The preterite and past participle are obsolete.

Sneap, sneb, snub, to check, chide, rebuke angrily, to be sharp to a person, like a cutting wind.

An envious sneaping frost
That bites the first-born infants of the spring.

—SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour Lost.

Do you sneap me too, my lord?

—BROWNE's Antipodes.

This word only survives in its past participle snub, which has become the infinitive of a verb with the original meaning.

Snow, snew, snown, to drop partially congealed rain. The preterite and past participle survive in America, but are considered vulgarisms.

Withouten bake meat never was his house,
Of fish and flesh, and that so plenteous,
It sneve in his house of meat and drink.

—CHAUCER: Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

First it blew, and then it snew, and then it friz horrid.

—MAJOR DOWNING's Letters.

Ben Jonson, in his "English Grammar," cites the following verbs that make their preterite in ew—viz., blow, grow, throw, crow, know, draw, slay, and snow. The last is the only one of the number that now forms its preterite in ed, though uneducated people both in Great Britain and America sometimes form the preterites of grow, blow, and know in ed—as when Topsy, in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," says "she grewed." "I knowed it," instead of "I knew it," is also a common vulgarism.

Stand, stood, studden.

Weel, I thought there was naething but what your honour could hae studden in the way o' agreeable conversation.—SCOTT: The Antiquary.

Stent, stint, stunt, to desist, to cease, to limit, to confine within a certain bound. This verb is a curious instance of the liberties which Time takes with the old words of a language. The three inflections have each been made to do duty for an infinitive, so that one verb has been virtually converted into three. Chaucer has stent, the correct and original form:—

And of this cry we would they never stent.

—The Knight's Tale.

The noun stent, an allotted portion of work, though obsolete in England, is common in America.

Little boys in the country, working against time, with stents to do.—THEODORE PARKER: Discourse on the Death of Daniel Webster.

Stint, the ancient preterite, is the modern infinitive, and forms its preterite and past participle regularly in ed. Stint, to stint, or stop, or cease in growth, goes through the same inflections. The late Daniel O'Connell called the Duke of Wellington a "stunted corporal."

Sweat, swat, to perspire. This ancient word survives in colloquial, but has been of late years banished from literary English, and from polite society. The curse pronounced upon Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat [or earn] thy bread," would have lost much of its native energy if the ancient translators had been as mealy-mouthed as the men of the present day, and rendered sweat by perspiration.

His fair steed
So sweat that men might him ring.

—CHAUCER: The Rhyme of Sir Topaz.

His hackenye which that was al pomelee gris,
So sucatte that it wonder was to see.

—The Chanones Yemanne's Tale.

Some, lucky, find a flowery spot,
For which they never toiled nor sweat.

—BURNS: Epistle to James Smith.

An anecdote is related by Dean Ramsay, of a sturdy old lady who so greatly loved hearty vehemence in preaching, that she delighted in one particular minister, because when he preached he was in such grim earnest with his discourse that "he grat and spat and sweat" over it!

Swell, swale, swoll, swollen. The preterite in swale is almost obsolete; that in swoll has been newly revived, but scarcely holds its own against swelled.

An' thought it swale so sore about hir harte.

—CHAUCER: The Wife of Bath's Tale.

Swink, swank, swonken, to labour over hard. This word appears to have been almost obsolete in Shakspeare's time. Some of his contemporaries use it, and Milton tried to revive it.

In setting and sowing Swinken full hard.

—Piers Ploughman.

Great boobies and long
That loth were to swink.

—Piers Ploughman.

For which men swink and sweat incessantly.

—SPENSER: Faerie Queene.

We'll labour and swinke,
We'll kiss and we'll drinke.

—BEAUMONT and FLETCHER: The Spanish Cureto.

For he had swonken all the nighte long.

—CHAUCER: The Reeve's Tale.

Thole, tholed, to suffer, to endure, to tolerate. This word is in common use throughout Scotland and on the English border, but has long been lost to literature.

Which died and death tholed
About mid-day.

—Piers Ploughman.

What mischief and malease Christ for man tholed.

—CHAUCER: Visions.

What mickle wo as I with you have tholed.

—CHAUCER.

She shall the death thole.

—GOWER: Confessio Amantis.

He who tholes conquers.

—ALLAN RAMSAY'S Scots Proverbs.

Tenant bodies, scant o' cash,
How they maun thole the factor's snash!

—BURNS.

Threap, to argue, to complain, to lament.

'Tis not for man with a woman to threap.

—PERCY'S Reliques: Tak' thy auld cloak about thee.

Some cry upon God, others threap that He hath forgotten them.

—BISHOP FISHER.

Some heads well learned upon the book,
Would threap auld folks the thing mistook.

—BURNS.

In Grose's "Provincial Glossary" a shopkeeper's phrase is quoted, "This is not threaping ware"—i.e., these goods are so superior that they are not to be argued about or cheapened.

Thring, throng, thrung, to press, to jostle, to crowd, whence the modern word to throng.

A thousand of men,
Thrunge together,
Cried upwards to Christ.

—Piers Ploughman.

The Scottish word thrang—i.e., busy with a crowd of customers—is a remnant of this word, in which, as in many others, the original preterite has been made to do duty for the infinitive and the present tense.

Trat, the preterite of treat.—TIM BOBBIN.

Wax, wox, waxed, woxen, woxed, to grow, to increase. This word, chiefly preserved by its frequent use in the Old and New Testament, lost its original preterite and participle, wox and woxen, before the translation of the Bible in the reign of James I., at which time the word wax, with the regular inflections, was in common use.

And when he woxen was more
In his mother's absence.

—Piers Ploughman.

This man wox wellnigh wood [mad] for ire.

—CHAUCER: The Sompnoure's Tale.

Before my breath, like blazen flax,
Man and his marvels pass away;

And changing empires wane and waz,
Are founded, flourish, and decay.

—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Translation of the Dies Irae.

Wink, wank, to close and open the eyes, to make signals with the eye.

Our king on the shepherd wank
Privily with his eye.

—HALLIWELL: MS. Cantab.

Wreak, wreaked, wroke, wroken, to avenge. The infinitive of this verb is still current in connection with the nouns wrath, vengeance, displeasure, spite, and others.

So wreake us, God, of all our foes.

—Sir Bevis of Hampton.

'Tis not my fault, the boar provoked my tongue.
Be wreaked on him.

—SHAKESPEARE: Venus and Adonis.

And soon in the Gordon's foul heart's blood,
He's wroken his faire ladye.

—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

To have wroken himself of such wrongs as were due him by the French king.—HOLINSHED'S Chronicles.

The verbs here quoted are merely samples of the literary treasures that lie concealed in the speech of the common people of the northern counties, in the old English authors anterior to Shakspeare, and in the Scottish literature of the present day. What should we say if an English nobleman of ancient and illustrious lineage and great wealth had in the cellars and vaults of his castle hundreds of coffers and oaken chests filled to the lid with coins of the purest gold stamped with the image and superscription of bygone kings, if he would never use nor look at any portion of his wealth? What, also, should we say of him if, in want of gold for his daily needs, he persisted in borrowing it from strangers at usurious interest, rather than touch his antique treasures? We should say he was unwise, or at the least eccentric, and that it was questionable whether he deserved to possess the great wealth which he had inherited. Every master of the English tongue, whether he be poet, orator, or great prose writer, is in the position of this supposed nobleman, if he will not study the ancient words of the language, and revive to the extent of his ability such among them as he finds to be better adapted to express strong as well as delicate shades of meaning, than the modern words which have usurped their places. To the poets more especially, and, if there be none such left in our day (which we should be very sorry to assert, when certain great names flash upon our memory), to the versifiers who are not likely ever to fail us as long as there are hopes and fancies in the hearts of young men and women, this is a matter of especial concern. The permissible rhymes of the modern English tongue are not copious in number; and such as exist, if not as well worn as love and dove, breeze and trees, heart and dart, are far too familiar to come upon the ear with any great charm of novelty. The dactylic rhymes are still fewer, as every one who has tried his hand at versification is painfully aware. It is the poet, more than the prose writer, who strengthens as well as beautifies the language which he employs. It is true that language first makes literature; and that literature, when once established among a people, reacts upon language, and fixes its form—decides what words shall and what words shall not be used in the higher forms of prose and poetical composition. Old English—such as it is found in “Piers Ploughman,” Chaucer, Spenser, and the poets and dramatists of the Elizabethan era, and as late as Milton and Dryden—is a passionate rather than an argumentative language; and poets, who ought to be passionate above all else, otherwise they are but mere versifiers, should go back to those ancient sources, if they would be strong without ceasing to be correct and elegant. The words that were good enough for Shakspeare and his contemporaries ought to be good enough for the greatest writers of our day. But Shakspeare himself is becoming obsolete, and needs the aid of a glossary to explain to educated people many expressions and words that are quite intelligible to a Scottish or English peasant or roughman. Is it the fault of Shakspeare or of modern writers that this should be the case? Doubtless the fault is not in Shakspeare, but in ourselves.

It is nae mair to see a woman greet than to see a goose gae barefoot.
It is nae play when ane laughs and anither greets.
It is no the way to grip a bird to fling your bonnet at it.
It is not what is she, but what has she?
It is weel ware'd that wasters want.
It is weel that our fauts are not written on our face.
It is time enough to skreigh when ye're stricken.
It is time enough to make my bed when I'm gawn to lie down.
It is the best spoke in your wheel.
It keeps his nose at the grindstane.

Up starts a carle and gather'd good,
And thence came a' our gentle blood.
Use makes perfytness.

WAD ye gar us trow that the moon's made o' green cheese, or that spade-shafts bear plumbs?
Wage will get a page.
Wae's the wife that wants the tongue, but well's the man that gets her.
Want of wit is waur than want of wealth.
War makes thieves, and peace hangs them.
Wark bears witness of wha well does.
Wealth gars wit waver.
Weans maun creep ere they gang.
Well kens the mouse when the cat's out o' the house.
Well's him and wae's him that has a bishop in his kin.
Welcome is the best dish in the kitchen.
Well worth a' that gars the plough draw.
Well is that well does.
Were it not for hope heart wad break.
We'll never ken the worth of the water till the well gaes dry.
We can drink of the burn when we canna bite of the brae.
We'll meet ere hills meet.
We can live without our kin, but no without our neighbours.
We'll bark ourselts ere we buy dogs sae dear.
We canna baith sup and blaw.
We maun live by the living, but no by the dead.
We are bound to be honest and no to be rich.
We may ken your meaning by your mumping.
Wedding and ill wintering tame baith man and beast.

We are aye to lear as lang as we live.
 We can poid for debt, but no for unkindness.
 We may ken your eilk by the runcles o' your horn.
 Wee things fley cowards.
 Wha wats wha may keep sheep another day.
 Wha uses perils, perish shall.
 What ye win at that, ye may lick aff a het girdle.
 What better is the house that the daw rises soon.
 Wha can hand what will away?
 Wha comes aftener and brings you less?
 Wha daur bell the cat?
 Wha can help misluck?
 Wha canna gi'e will little get.
 What the eye sees na the heart rues na.
 What's nane o' my profit shall be nane o' my peril.
 What if the lift fa', then ye may gather lav'rocks.
 What's gotten o'er the de'il's back will gang away under his belly.
 What raks the feud where the friendship dow not.
 What winna do by might do by flight.
 What's my case the day may be yours the morn.
 What's waur than ill luck?
 What may be done at ony time will be done at nae time.
 What puts that in your head that didna put the sturdy wit?
 What need a rich man be a thief?
 What said Pluck? the greater knave the greater luck.
 What may be, may not be.
 What canna be cured maun be endured.
 When ae door steeks anither opens.
 When a' men speaks nae man hears.
 When drink's in wit's out.
 When friends meet hearts warm.
 When Adam delved and Eve span,
 Where was a' our gentry than?
 When my head's down my house is theeked.
 When the tod preaches tak tent o' the lambs.
 When thieves reckon, leal fowk comes to their gear.
 When the bags are fou the dron gets up.
 When the tod wins to the wood he cares not how many keek for his tail.
 When the cup's fu' carry it even.
 When poverty comes in at the door friendship flies out of the window.
 When lairds break carles get land.
 When a fool finds a horse-shoe,
 He thinks aye the like to do.
 When a' fruit fa's, then welcome haws.
 When I'm dead make me a cawdel.

When ilka ain gets their ain the thief will get the widdy.
When a ewe's drown'd she's dead.
When the goodman drinks to the goodwife, a' wad be well.
When the goodwife drinks to the goodman, a' is well.
When the heart's fou of lust the mouth's fou of leasing.
When your neighbour's house is in danger take care o' your ain.
When you are served a' the geese are water'd.
When wine sinks words swim.
When the barn's fu' you may thresh before the door.
When ye're gaun and coming the gate's no toom.
When the heart's fu' the tongue will speak.
When he dies for age ye may quake for fear.
When ye are weel, haud yoursell sae.
When the well's fu' it will rin o'er.
When the pot's o'er fu', it will boil o'er and bleeze in the ingle.
When the steed's stown, steek the stable door.
Where the buck's bound, there he maun bleet.
Where the deer's slain some of the blood will lie.
Where the dyke's laigest it is eitheist to lowp.
Where there is o'er mickle courtesy there is little kindness.
Where there is naething the king tines his right.
Where drums beat laws are dumb.
Where the pig's broken let the sherds lie.
Where there are gentles there is aye aff-fawing.
Where gat ye that, gif a body may speer?
I gat it where it was, and where leal fowk get gear.
Where will you get a park to keep your yeld kye in?
Where the heart gangs let the tail follow.
While the grass grows the steed starves.
Whitely things are aye tender.
Whom God will help nane can hinder.
Will a fool's feather in my cap gar my pot play?
Wipe wi' the water and wash wi' the towel.
Wise men may be whilly'd wi' wiles.
Wives and wind are necessary ills.
Widdy haud thy ain!
Wilfu' waste makes waefu' want.
Wiles help weak fowk.
Will and wit strive wi' ye!
Win't and wear't.
Winter thunder bodes summer hunger.
Wink at wee faults, your ain are muckle.
Wishers and waddlers were never good house hauders.
Wit bought makes fowk wise.
Wit bought is worth twa for nought.
Woman's wark's never done.
Women and bairns lein what they ken not.

Wood in a wilderness, moss on a mountain,
 And wit in a poor man are little thought on.
 Words are but win, but dunts are out o' season.
 Woo sellers ken aye woo buyers.
 Work for nought makes fowk dead sweer.
 Wrang has nae warrant.
 Wrang count is nae payment.
 Wad ye gar me trow that my head's cow'd when ne'er a shear's come on't?
 Wae to the wame that has a wilfu' master.
 Wae's them that has the cat's dish and she aye mewting.
 Water stowps had nae ale.
 Wealth in the widow's house, kail but saut.
 Well worth a' good takens.
 We are as mony Johnstons as ye are Jardines.
 We hounds slew the hare, quoth the bleer'd messan.
 Wha invited you to the roast?
 Wha can court but cost.
 Wha made you a gentleman that didna cut the lugs frae your head to ken you by.
 What ye do when you're drunk ye may pay for when you're dry.
 What ye want up and down ye have hither and yont.

YE breed of the tod, ye grow gray before ye grow good.
 Ye breed of the miller's dog, ye lick your lips ere the pock be opened.
 Ye breed of Macfarlane's geese, ye have mair mind o' your play than your meat.
 Ye breed of the cow's tail, you grow backward.
 Ye breed of nettle kail and cock lairds, ye need muckle service.
 Ye breed of the gowk, ye have never a rhyme but ane.
 Ye breed of ill weather, ye come unsent for.
 Ye breed of Saughton swine, your neb's ne'er out of an ill turn.
 Ye breed of auld maidens, ye look sae high.
 Ye breed of the chapman, ye're aye to handsell.
 Ye breed of our laird, ye'll do nae right nor take nae wrang.
 Ye breed of good mawt, ye're lang a-coming.
 Ye breed of the beggars, ye're never out of your gate.
 Ye breed of the butcher, that seeks his knife when it is in his teeth.
 Ye breed of the leek, ye have a white head and a green tail.
 Ye breed of Lady Mary, when ye're good ye're ower good.
 Ye breed of the miller's daughter, that speer'd what tree groats grew on.
 Ye breed of the goodman's mither, ye're aye in the gate.
 Ye breed of the witches, ye can do nae good to yoursell.
 Ye breed o the herd's wife, ye busk again e'en.
 Ye breed of the baxters, ye loo your neighbour's browst better than your ain batch.
 Ye crack crouslly with your bonnet on.

Ye cut before the point.
Ye come a day after the fair.
Ye cut lang whangs out o' other fowks' leather.
Ye come aftener with the rake than the shool.
Ye canna make a silk purse of a sow's lug.
Ye canna see wood for trees.
Ye can never fare well but ye cry roast meat.
Ye came a clipping time.
Ye cangle about uncost kids.
Ye canna preach out o' your ain poupit.
Ye canna get leave to thrive for thrang.
Ye ca' hardest at the nail that drives fastest.
Ye canna do but ye ower do.
Ye drive the plough afore the owsen.
Ye dinna ken where a blessing may light.
Ye drew not sae well when my mare was in the mire.
Ye feik it awa' like an auld wife baking.
Ye gat your will in your first wife's time, and ye'se no want it now.
Ye glowr'd at the moon and fell on the middin'.
Ye gang about by Lanark, for fear Linton dogs bite you.
Ye glowr like a wild-cat out o' a whin-bush.
Ye get o'er muckle o' your will, and that's no good for you.
Ye gae far about seeking the nearest.
Ye have run lang on little ground.
Ye have aye mind of your meat though ye have ill luck til't.
Ye have a ready mouth for a ripe cherry.
Ye have a saw for ilka sair.
Ye have brought the pack to the pins.
Ye have given the wolf the wedder to keep.
Ye have tied a knot with your tongue that ye canna loose with a' your teeth.
Ye have been bred about a mill, ye have moup'd a' your manners.
Ye have o'er foul feet to come sae far benn.
Ye have a staw'k of carle hemp in you.
Ye have gotten a revel'd hesp o't.
Ye have ae crap for a' corn.
Ye have tane the measure of his foot.
Ye have o'er muckle loose leather about your chafts.
Ye have tint your ain stomach and found a tike's.
Ye have put a toom spoon in my mouth.
Ye have fasted lang, and worried on a midge.
Ye have tint the tongue o' your trump.
Ye have staid lang, and brought little wi' ye.
Ye have g'en baith the sound thump and the loud skirl.
Ye have aye a foot out of the langle.
Ye have tane't upon you as the wife did the dancing.
Ye have good manners, but ye bear them not aye about wi' you.

Ye have the wrang sow by the lug.
Ye ken naething but milk and bread when it is mool'd in to you.
Ye ken what drinkers dree.
Ye kenna wha may cool your kail yet.
Ye live at the lug o' the law.
Yelping curs will raise mastiffs.
Ye live on love as lav'rocks do on leeks.
Ye'll neither dance nor haud the candle.
Ye'll get nae mair of the cat but the skin.
Ye look like let me be.
Ye look like a Lochaber-axe new come frae the grindstane.
Ye'll no sell your hen on a rainy day.
Ye'll get as mickle for ae wish this year as for twa fern year.
Ye'll gar me seek the needle where I didna stick it.
Ye'll never cast saut on his tail.
Ye look like a Lammermoor lion.
Ye'll let naething be tint for want o' seeking.
Ye'll no harry yoursell wi' your ain hands.
Ye look like the de'il in daylight.
Ye look liker a thief than a bishop.
Ye'll ne'er make a mark in your testament by that bargain.
Ye'll let little gae by you unless it be the swallow.
Ye may tine the father seeking the son.
Ye may drive the de'il into a wife, but ye'll ne'er ding him out of her.
Ye may be greedy, but ye're no greening.
Ye may gang farther and fare warse.
Ye may be heard where ye're no seen.
Ye may gang thro' a' Egypt without a pass.
Ye may hae a good memory, but your judgment winna gi'e mickle.
Ye maun take the will for the deed.
Ye maunna think to win thro' the warld on a feather-bed.
Ye maunna be mealy-mou'd.
Ye mete my pease by your ain peck.
You look like a runner, quoth the de'il to the lobster.
Ye'll be made up at the sign o' the wind.
Ye'll play at sma' game before ye stand out.
Ye'll beguile nane but them that lippens to you.
Ye'll mend when ye grow better.
Ye'll never be sae auld with sae mickle honesty.
Ye never saw green cheese but your e'en reel'd.
Ye never want a good whittle at your belt.
Ye never heard a fisher cry stinking fish.
Ye needna think shame to tak it, your teeth's langer than your beard.
Ye put at the cart that's aye gauging.
Ye're as daft as ye're days auld.
Ye're o'er auld farran to be fley'd for bogles.
Ye're a good seeker but an ill finder.

Ye ride a bootless errand.
Ye're like the wife wi' the mony daughters, the best comes last.
Ye're nae chicken for a' your cheeping.
Ye're come o' blood, and sae is a pudding.
Ye're come to a peel'd egg.
Ye're a widdy-fou against hanging time.
Ye're as lang a tuning your pipes as ane wad play a spring.
Ye're good enough but ye're no braw new.
Ye're no sae poor as ye peep.
Ye're well away if ye bide, and we're well quat.
Ye're of sae mony minds, ye'll never be married.
Ye're come to fetch fire.
Ye're sae weel in your wooing ye watna where to wed.
Ye're never pleased fu' nor fasting.
Ye're black about the mouth for want of making of.
Ye're welcome, but ye winna win ben.
Ye're unco good and ye'll grow fair.
Ye're sair fash'd hadding naething together.
Ye're not fed with deaf nuts.
Ye're sick but no sair handled.
Ye're busy seeking a thing that's no tint.
Ye're good for carrying a propine, ye can make muckle of little.
Ye're like the hens, ye rin aye to the heap.
Ye're fear'd for the day ye never saw.
Ye're bonny enough to them that loo you, and o'er bonny to them

Ye're new risen and your young heart's nipping.
Ye're a sweet nut if you were well cracked.
Ye're no light where ye lean a'.
Ye're mair fley'd than hurt.
Ye're Davy do a' thing and good at naething.
Ye seek grace o' a graceless face.

Coost me in the kirk and syne harl'd me out.
Ye may dight your neb and fly up.
Ye'll never die on your ain assize.
Ye'll drink afore me.

Ye'll get the cat wi' the twa tails.
Ye're the greatest liar o' your kin except your chief that wan his meat by't.
Ye're mistane o' the stuff, it is haff silk.
Ye'se no want while I hae, but look weel to your ain.
Ye soon weary o' well-doing.
Ye'se get your brose out o' the lee side of the pot.

Ye shanna be niffer'd but for a better.
 Ye sleep like a dog in a mill.
 Ye shape shoon by your ain shachled feet.
 Ye take mair in your gab than your cheeks can hand.
 Ye take the first word of flyting.
 Ye tine the ladle for the licking.
 Your tongue's nae slander.
 Your tongue rins aye before ye

(1840); "Norman Sinclair" (1861). He was one of the authors, in conjunction with Sir Theodore Martin, of the "Bon Gaultier Ballads."

Baillie, Joanna (1762-1851), a Scottish poetess and dramatist, many of whose songs became popular, and still maintain their place in literature.

Balfour, Alexander (1776-1829), a miscellaneous writer, among whose works may be mentioned "Campbell, or the Scottish Probationer," a novel, published in 1819; an edition of Gall's poems in the same year; a volume of his own poems, entitled "Contemplations," and several other novels.

Balfour, Sir James, a distinguished lawyer who died in 1583-84. His chief work, "The Practicks of Scots Law" (in MSS.), was for a long period a standard work of reference. It was printed in 1754 with a biographical introduction by Walter Goodal.

Ballantyne, James (1772-1833).

The senior member of the celebrated printing and publishing firm of that name. He was an intimate friend and afterwards partner of Sir Walter Scott, a friendship which commenced at school and lasted through life. To Mr. Ballantyne's judicious criticism are owing many corrections and suggestions in the works of the "Wizard of the North."

Bannatyne, George (1545-1606).

The name of this eminent collector of Scottish poetry of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries has been adopted as the cognomen of a distinguished literary Society. His "Ancient Scottish Poems" was published in 1770.

Barbour, John (1316-1395), a historical poet, author of "The Bruce," a metrical chronicle finished in 1375 and first published from the MS. in 1489. This work possesses great value as an historical record, and has run through about twenty editions, of which the best are Pinkerton's (dated 1790) and Dr. Jamieson's (1820).

Beattie, George (1785-1823), was an advocate or solicitor at Montrose. His principal work is, "John o' Arnha," a humorous and satirical poem somewhat in the style of "Tam o' Shanter."

Beattie, James, LL.D. (1735-1803), a poet, essayist, and miscellaneous writer, born at Laurencekirk, Kircardineshire. His name was first brought prominently before the public by his "Essay on the Nature and Immutability of Truth in Opposition to Sophistry and Scepticism," a reply to Hume. His other works are—"Judgment of Paris" (1765); "The Minstrel," in two parts, Spenserian metre. (Incomplete. Merivale added a third part). (Life by Sir William Forbes, 1806; Mudford, 1809; Dyce, 1831.) He was part author of the beautiful Scottish song, "There's nae luck about the house."

Bellenden, John (or Ballenden, or Ballentyne), poet and historian. Archdeacon of Moray, and Canon of Ross (1490-1560). In 1530 and 1531 he was employed by command of James V. in translating Bolce's "History and Chroniklis of Scotland," from the Latin into the Scottish vernacular. He died at Rome in 1550. Among his other poems as unquestionably a man of great parts, and one of the finest poets his country had, may be mentioned "Vertue and Vyse," "The Proheme of the Cosmographe" (the most poetical of his works), and "The Proheme of the History." He also wrote the "Topography of Scotland" (1577); Carmichael's

"Collections of Scottish Poems" contains some specimens of his style.

Bennoch, Francis (born 1812). He has published a volume of "Poems, Lyrics, Songs, and Sonnets," and edited a collection of Miss Mitford's tales.

Bethune, John (1812-1839), son of a farm-servant, and himself a labourer. In conjunction with his brother Alexander he wrote the "Tales and Sketches of the Scottish Peasantry" (1836). Two years afterwards, "Lectures on Practical Economy" appeared; and as "A Fifeshire Forester" he contributed a number of poems to the Scottish Christian Herald, and the Christian Instructor.

Blacklock, Thomas, D.D. (1721-1791), a poet and divine who was deprived of sight in his earliest infancy. His chief works are "The Graham," a heroic ballad (1774); "Paracelsus" (1767); and two volumes of "Poems" (1745 and 1754). The article "Blind," in the Encyclopædia Britannica, was written by him. After his death his writings were collected by H. Mackenzie (1793). He was one of the eminent men of letters in Edinburgh who welcomed and did honour to Robert Burns on his celebrated visit to that city.

Boswell, Sir Alexander (1775-1822), was the eldest son of James Boswell, the biographer of Dr. Johnson. His writings are noteworthy for their lively imagination, satire, and humour. Many of his "Songs, chiefly in the Scottish Dialect" (1803), have achieved permanent popularity, the best known being "Auld Gude Man, ye're a Drucken Carle;" "Jenny's Bawbee;" "Jenny Dang the Weaver;" and a poem, published under an assumed name, is entitled "Edinburgh, or the Ancient Royalty, a Sketch of Former Manners, by Simon Gray" (1810). Another work in Scottish verse is "Skeldon Haughs, or the Sow is Flitted" (1816), and "Clan Alpin's Vow." Created a baronet in 1821. He received a death-wound in a duel with Mr. Stewart of Auldearn, afterwards editor of the Courier, a London evening paper, resulting from some political satires published in the Sentinel.

Brunton, George (1799-1863), a miscellaneous writer of prose and verse illustrative of Scottish life, manners, and localities. These sketches and tales appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine, the Scottish Literary Gazette, and Tait's Magazine. In 1834 he became editor of the Scottish Patriot, having previously edited the Citizen. After the publication of "An Historical Account of the Senators of the College of Justice," in which he was associated with Mr. David Haig, he, in conjunction with the latter, started the Scots Weekly Magazine, which was exclusively devoted to the elucidation of Scottish history and antiquities, and Scottish life and manners.

Burns, Robert (1759-1796), the most popular of all the Scottish poets, and whose fame has become world-wide. The range and variety of his powers are unsurpassed in the literature of his country; including, as they do, such different and such excellent poems as the "Cotter's Saturday Night," "Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled," "Auld Lang Syne," "A Man's a Man for a' that," "Holy Willie's Prayer," "Tam o' Shanter," "Death and Dr. Hornbook," "The Twa Dogs," all of which have sunk deep into the remembrance and hearts of Scotsmen in every part of the world, and are familiar to all educated Englishmen. His name and songs have become dear to every patriotic Scotsman, and the language of his country will, doubtless, be perpetuated in his works long after it has become an unspoken tongue.

Callander, John (—1789). An antiquary born about the beginning of the eighteenth century. His best known work is "Two Ancient Scottish Poems" (1782); beside this he translated Brosse's "Terra Australia Coqueta" from the French. He also projected, but did not carry out, works on the "History of the Ancient Music of Scotland," and a "Scoto-Gothic Glossary." He was accused of plagiarism in connection with some "Annotations to Milton's Paradise Lost," which it would appear without some reason.

Campbell, Alexander (1764-1824). His first literary effort was "An Introduction to the History of Poetry in Scotland" (1798), together with "Songs of the Lowlands." This was followed in 1802 by "A Tour from Edinburgh through Various Parts of North Britain," generally considered to be his best work; "The Grampians Desolate" (1804), showed a diminution of power. His last work (1816), was "Albyn's Anthology," a collection of native Highland music to which Sir Walter Scott and others contributed verses.

Campbell, Thomas (1777-1844), author of "The Pleasures of Hope," and the spirited songs and ballads "Ye Mariners of England," "The Battle of Hohenlinden," "The Exile of Erin," "Lochiel's Warning," "The Soldier's Dream," and "Lord Ullin's Daughter." He was one of the originators of the London University, and afterwards Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow. He is buried in Westminster Abbey.

Carrick, John Donald (1787-1837), best known as the author of "The Life of Wallace," was a voluminous miscellaneous writer of considerable repute. He was deeply read in old Scottish literature, and became successively editor of the Scots Times, the Perth Advertiser, and the Kilmarnock Journal. His latest work, "The Laird of Logan," is a well-known series of Scottish sketches, to which work he was the largest contributor.

Chalmers, George (1742-1825), a historian and antiquary, whose principal production was his "Caledonia" (1807-1824). He also wrote a "History of Scottish Poetry," a "History of Printing in Scotland," Lives of Defoe (1785), Mary Queen of Scots (1818), Thomas Ruddiman (1794), and several other works, one of which was an illustrated edition of the poems of Allan Ramsay.

Chambers, Robert, LL.D. (1802-1871), a voluminous, historical, miscellaneous writer, and one of the founders of the great publishing firm of William and Robert Chambers. During his forty years of literary labour he produced no less than one hundred volumes, the most notable of his works being "Popular Rhymes of Scotland" (1826), "Pictures of Scotland" (1827), "Histories of the Scottish Rebellions," and a "Life of James I." His "Book of Days," "Biographical Dictionary of Eminent Scotsmen," and his various educational works for "the entertainment and instruction of the people." Since his death, his authorship of the celebrated "Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation" has been publicly avowed.

Cunningham, Thomas (1776-1834), a lyric writer of great merit, and a constant contributor to the Edinburgh Maga- zine, to which he sent not only poems and songs but miscellaneous sketches and stories, all characterised by a somewhat rare vein of pathos, oddity, and humour.

Cunningham, Allan (1784-1842), one of the first of Scottish song writers. His literary productions were extremely numerous, but, perhaps, apart from poetry, his "Life of Burns" is the masterpiece.

Douglas, Gawyn or Gavin (1474-1522), styled "the most classical of Scottish poets." He was Bishop of Dunkeld, and translated into the Scottish vernacular the "Æneid" of Virgil, prefixing a poetical introduction of his own to each book.

Drummond, William, of Hawthornden (1585-1649), author of "History of the Five Jameses, Kings of Scotland," which is strongly tinged with royalist principles. His poems and songs are characterised by delicacy and tenderness of treatment.

Dunbar, William (1465- —), one of the chief of early Scotch poets. His "Thistle and the Rose" is a poem of surpassing beauty. Others are entitled "The Golden Targe," "The Twa Married Women," and "The Weds." He interwove Latin with Scottish verses in a very fantastic manner.

Ferguson, Robert (1750-1774), Born and educated at Aberdeen, most of his poems had appeared in Ruddiman's Weekly Magazine before he had attained his twentieth year. A monument to his memory was erected over his grave in Edinburgh at the expense of Robert Burns, out of the profits of the Edinburgh edition of his "Poems and Songs."

Finlay, John (1782-1810). The chief poems of this writer are "Wallace, or the Fate of Ellerslie," and "Scottish Historical and Romantic Ballads," both of these works displaying considerable knowledge and research.

Gall, Richard (1776-1801). His principal poems were "Farewell to Ayrshire" (erroneously attributed to Burns), and "My only Jo and Dearie O;" besides which, "The Braes of Drumlee," and "Captain O'Kain," merit special mention.

Galloway, Robert (1752-1794). The "Poems, Epistles, and Songs" of this poet were chiefly written in the Scottish tongue. A shoemaker by trade, he subsequently became a bookseller in Glasgow. His poems were published in that city in 1788.

Galt, John (1779-1839), a writer, whose productions consisted of poems, prose essays, and a large number of novels, in all upwards of fifty volumes. The following are his principal works:—Lives of Cardinal Wolsey (1812), Benjamin West (1816), Lord Byron (1830); "The Players" (1831); "An Autobiography" (1833); "Literary Life and Miscellanies" (1834); "Ourand-logos" (1833); "Voyages and Travels" (1812); and "The Wandering Jew." His best novels were entitled "Annals of the Parish" (1821), and "Ayrshire Legatees" (same year).

Gilfillan, Robert (1798-1850). This writer's lyrical productions were gathered in a volume published in 1831, entitled "Original Songs." In 1835 and 1839 enlarged editions were issued.

Glen, William (1789-1826), a lyrical writer, some of whose productions have found their way into every Scottish home. His Jacobite song, "Wae's me for Prince Charlie," was one of the most touching and popular of the songs of the time.

Grant, Joseph (1805-1835). The tales and poetry of this writer were principally in the Scottish language. His latest work, published posthumously, was "Tales of the Glens" (1836), with a memoir by Robert Nichol.

Hamilton, William (1704-1754). A native of Bangour, he received a liberal education, and early cultivated a taste for poetry. The Jacobite song, "Gladsmuir," his first success, was due to the part he took in the rebellion of 1745. On "The Braes of Yarrow," however, is based his chief claim to remembrance. His works were collected and published in Edinburgh in 1766.

Hamilton, William. Born at Gilbertfield, he, after some years of military service, left the army to devote himself to literature. He was a friend and correspondent of Allan Ramsay. Watson's "Choice Collection of Scots Poems" contains his chief writings. In 1722 he issued, rendered into modern Scotch, an edition of Blind Harry's "Life of Wallace," a work which has been frequently reprinted.

Harry the Minstrel, or Blind Harry, as he is more popularly called. His history is obscure, but he wrote in the vernacular the achievements of Wallace, the champion of Scottish Independence. So little is known of him that his surname has never been ascertained. It seems, however, that he was blind from his birth, and that he followed the occupation of a wandering minstrel. His only poem now extant is entitled, "Ye actis and deidis of ye illuster and vailzeand campoun shyr Willam Wallace," the MS. of which is now preserved in the Advocates' Library, bearing the date of 1488.

Hedderwick, James, LL.D., a well-known journalist and poet, in early life sub-editor of the Scotsman. He subsequently started the Glasgow Citizen and other periodicals. His principal work is "Lays of the Middle Ages."

Henderson, Andrew (1783-1835). author of a "Collection of Scottish Proverbs" published in 1832, to which William Motherwell contributed an introduction.

Henryson, Robert, who flourished in the fifteenth century. The date and place of his birth are unknown. His "Robene and Makyne" is thought to be the earliest specimen of pastoral poetry in the Scottish language. Examples of his verse are included in Irving's "Lives of the Scottish Poets," Hailes' "Ancient Scottish Poems," Ellis' "Specimens," and Sibbald's "Chronicle of Scottish Poetry." His chief works are "The Bludy Serf," "Fabills" (printed 1621); "Orpheus Kyng, and how he yeid to Newyn and to hel to seik his Quene" (printed 1508); "Tailles of the Uplandis Mons and the burges mons" (printed 1815), and the "Testament of faire Crescide" (printed 1593).

Herd, David (1732-1810). Sir Walter Scott, in his "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," speaks of Herd as "the editor of the first classical collection of Scottish songs and ballads," and further acknowledges his indebtedness to those manuscripts entitled "A Collection of Ancient and Modern Scottish Songs, Heroic Ballads," &c. This was published in 1769. Herd also wrote concerning Scottish poetry and antiquities in the periodicals of his time.

Hogg, James (1782-1835), who is more popularly known as the Ettrick Shepherd, was born on the banks of the river of that name. Entirely self-taught, he seems, like many others of the national poets, to have been early attracted by the beauties of Blind Harry's "Life of Wallace," and Allan Ramsay's "Gentle Shepherd." "Donald M'Donald," his first published song, soon became very popular, and was speedily followed by "When the Kye Come Hame," which remains a choice favourite among all who love Scottish lyric poetry. From this time his reputation increased. In all he wrote about twenty volumes, the chief of which are "The Forest Minstrels" (a volume of songs, 1810), "Mador of the Moor" (1816, written in Spenserian stanzas); "The Mistakes of a Night" (1794); "The Mountain Bard" (1807); "Pilgrims of the Sun" (1815); "The Poetic Mirror" (1814); "Queen Hynde" (an epic poem, 1825); "Queen's Wake" (1813); and "Scottish Pastorals, Poems, and Songs" (1801). Besides these, he published several prose works, the chief of which are "The Altrive Tales" (1832); "The Brownie of Bodsbeck" (a tale of the Covenanters, 1818); "Lay Sermons" (1834); "Life of Sir Walter Scott," "Montrose Tales" (1835); "The Shepherd's Guide" (1807); "The Three Perils of Man" (1822); "The Three Perils of Woman: Love, Teasing, and Jealousy" (1823); "Winter Evening Tales" (1820), and a comprehensive collection of Jacobite songs and ballads.

Hume, Alexander (1560-1609), a sacred poet whose writings were much appreciated by the Presbyterians. Some of his works have been reprinted by the Bannatyne Club. Amongst the chief may be named, "Hymnes or Sacred Songs" (1599); "Flyting betwixt Montgomery and Polwart;" "Triumphs of Love, Chastitie, and Death," published posthumously in 1644.

Hume, Alexander (1809-1851), one of the "untutored" muses of Scotland, many of whose songs have been set to music. His "Wee, wee Wife;" "Menie Hay;" "Oh! Years hae Come," and "My Mountain Hame," were especial favourites.

Inglis, Henry, for many years a leading member of the legal profession in Edinburgh. He published "Marican, and other Poems" in 1851, and the "Briar of Threave" in 1855.

Inglis, Sir James, a poet and man of letters of the early part of the sixteenth century. It is generally supposed that "The Complaynt of Scotland," the earliest Scotch prose work extant, was written by him. It contains a minute account of the manners, customs, and popular literature of Scotland of that period. He filled the posts of Secretary to Queen Margaret, 1515, and Chancellor of the Royal Chapel of Stirling, 1527, subsequently becoming Abbot of Culross. He met with a violent death in 1530.

James I. of Scotland. After passing nineteen years of his earlier life in Windsor Castle, where he was held in captivity by the English monarch, he ascended the throne of Scotland in 1424. This royal poet ranks high among old Scottish authors. The MS. of his chief production, the "King's Quhair," an allegorical poem, was discovered in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and was published in 1783. Two other poems, dealing humorously with the rural manners and customs of his day, are also attributed to this monarch. These bear the titles of "Christ's Kirk on the Green," and "Pebblis to the Play." "The King's Quhair" is a production of the highest poetical merit, and was inspired by his love for a beautiful English lady of noble birth, whom he saw for the first time in his youthful captivity in Windsor, and whom he afterwards married and took to Scotland as his queen. He was assassinated by a company of aristocratic murderers, who slew him before her eyes, during a struggle in which the tender, affectionate, noble woman displayed in his defence the most touching and romantic heroism.

James V. of Scotland (1512-1542), a monarch who so endeared himself to his people that he bore the name of "King of the Poor." Being fond of romantic adventure he is reported to have often disguised himself and wandered through the country under the name of "The Gude-man of Ballangeich," the name of a pass on the rock on which Stirling Castle is built. His adventures formed the basis of two well-known ballads and songs attributed to and possibly written by him, the most popular of which is still current and often sung in Scotland, under the title of "We'll gang nae mair a Rovin', a Rovin' in the Night."

Jamieson, John, D.D. (1758-1838). This writer takes one of the first places amongst Scottish authors. Entering the ministry early in life, his first work consisted of two volumes of "Sermons on the Heart" (1789). This was followed in the same year by a poem in blank verse entitled "The Sorrows of Slavery," and in 1798 by another poetical work "Eternity." The publication of various theological volumes was followed by "The Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language" (1809-10). A supplement to this was issued in 1825. Amongst other volumes from his pen may be mentioned "Hermes Scythicus, &c." (1814); "Historical Account of the Ancient Culdees of Iona" (1811); "Historical Account of the Royal Palaces of Scotland" (1818).

Kennedy, Walter. Douglas calls this poet, who lived in the sixteenth century, "The great Kennedy." His chief work was "Flyting." Only two other short poems have been preserved, the rest having unfortunately been lost. These are

"Invective against Mouth-Thankless," and "Prais of Age."

Laidlaw, William. Born in 1780, died 1845. He was the farm-bailiff, amanuensis, and cherished friend of Sir Walter Scott during his residence at Abbotsford. He was the author of several admired songs, amongst which the best known is "Lucy's Flittin'," which appeared originally in the "Forest Minstrel" of the Ettrick Shepherd.

Lapraik, John, described by Robert Burns, who greatly admired his poetry, and wrote a rhymed epistle to him, as "a worthy facetious old fellow." He was owner of a small farm in Ayrshire. The date of his birth is unknown. He died in 1807. His principal and most popular poem is "Matrimonial Happiness," addressed to his wife—which Burns says "thrilled through his heart-strings a' to the life."

Lauder, William (—1771). This author is chiefly known by his attempt to fasten a charge of plagiarism upon Milton, and although at the instance of Dr. Johnson he withdrew it, he subsequently retracted his denial. He wrote a well-known work on Scottish literature, bearing the title of "Poetarum Scotorum Musæ Sacræ."

Leighton, Robert, born in 1822, is the author of "Rhymes and Poems by Robin" (1855).

and author of an excellent humorous poem, "The Baptisment of the Bairn."

Leyden, John, M.D. (1775-1811), a distinguished poet, linguist, and traveller. His works are numerous, and in their time were very popular. The bluntness and independence of manner, which met with little favour in society, served him in good stead in his literary labours. He visited the interior of Africa, India, and accompanied an expedition to Java, where he died. His most valuable work was "Discoveries and Travels in Africa" (1799); "Poems and Ballads" (posthumous, 1858); "Poetical Remains" (posthumous, 1819); "Scottish Descriptive Poems" (1803). His life was written by Rev. J. Morton (1819), and Sir Walter Scott (1858).

Lindsay, Lady Anne, daughter of the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres, afterwards Lady Ann Barnard. She is best known as the authoress of the exquisite and universally popular song of "Auld Robin Gray," which she published anonymously in 1772, when yet a young girl. She first avowed the authorship to Sir Walter Scott in her old age.

Lindsay, Sir David (1490-1569?), an eminent poet, whose chief works are "The Dreame" (1528), in which he applies the lash with great truth and force to abuses in Church and State, which had arisen from the licentious lives of the clergy and the usurpations of the nobles; "The Complaynt of the King's Passings," another satirical production of extreme pungency; a drama bearing the title of "A Satyre of the Three Estaties;" "The Supplication against Syde Taillis," a satire on woman's dress; "Kittie's Confession," ridiculing auricular confession; "The History and Testament of Squire Meldrum" (1550, the most pleasing of his compositions), and the last and greatest of his works, "The Monarchie" (1553). The whole of these books were written in the Scottish tongue, and are marked by strong satire and broad humour. Many of his moral sayings have passed into proverbs.

Lockhart, John Gibson (1794-1854), best known as the biographer of Sir Walter Scott, whose daughter he married. He was for many years and until his death the editor of the Quarterly Review. His humorous and quaint lament on "Captain Paton" is well known, and a great favourite in the legal and convivial circles of Edinburgh and Glasgow. He also wrote lives of Burns and Napoleon the First, in addition to several novels, and a very popular volume of Spanish ballads.

Logan, John, a clergyman of the Church of Scotland, born 1748, died 1788. He is known by

When only fourteen he went to the West Indies, remaining there until 1789. His principal poem, "Scotland's Skaith," appeared in 1795. So popular did it become that it passed through fourteen editions in twelve months. A complete collection of his poems was issued in 1801, and these were followed by two works in verse entitled "Town Fashions" and "By-gone Times." He also published a novel entitled "The Scottish Adventurers," and for a time was editor of The Scots Magazine. His best known song, entitled "Saw Ye my Wee Thing," is still highly popular.

Conjointly with Hogg he edited an edition of Burns's poems. The most noteworthy of his own songs are "Jeanie Morrison," "My Head is like to Rend, Willie," and "The Sword Chant."

Murray, Alexander, D.D. (1775-1813), an eminent philologist, who was entirely self-taught. His chief works were a volume of poems principally in the Scottish language, "Outlines of Oriental Philology," and a "History of European Languages," published posthumously.

Nairn, Carolina, Baroness (1766-1845), the gifted authoress of the inimitable "Laird o' Cockpen," and the touchingly pathetic "Land o' the Leal," songs which still retain their early popularity. Most of her verses appeared in "The Scottish Minstrel" under the signature B. B. She, however, in later years abandoned her incognito. She left a large number of unpublished songs.

Nicoll, Robert (1814-1837), a favourite Scottish poet; his first volume, "Poems and Lyrics," was published in 1835. In the following year he became editor of the Leeds Times, the circulation of which he quadrupled during his one year tenure of office.

"The Runes," "Select Scottish Ballads," "Letters of Literature," "Walpoliana," "Ancient Scottish Poems," "Treasury of Wit," "Iconographia Scotica," and the "Scottish Gallery" are his principal works. "Ephemerides," and "Scenes of Teviotdale" achieved a permanent popularity.

Ramsay, Allan (1686-1758). This distinguished poet ranks next to Burns and Scott in the favour of the Scottish people. His pastoral, "The Gentle Shepherd," is perhaps the finest poem of its kind in any language. His two great compilations, "The Evergreen" and the better known "Tea Table Miscellany," are essential to the completion of every Scottish library. He was originally a barber and wig maker in the High Street of Edinburgh, and is reported to have been the founder of the first Circulating Library ever established in Great Britain.

The ballad still continues to be popular in Scotland. Skirving wrote other songs, but they have fallen into oblivion.

Stoddart, Thomas Tod, born in 1810; he published, in 1831, "The Deathwake, or Lunacy;" "The Art of Angling," in 1836, and others of the same type, which have since been remodelled in the "Angler's Companion," a work still much in request. He died in Kelso, where he had long resided, in 1880.
